Mr. McGavin has been in England for some time, recruiting his health and enlisting the sympathy of friends in the work of the Mission. He recently left for Bombay, being accompanied by Mr. John Cowie, of the Faith Mission, Scotland, who is throwing himself into the work. On the eve of his departure, he wrote asking the prayers of the readers of The Christian.

COLLEGE LIFE.—III.

By CUTHBERT McEVOY, B.A.,

Classical Tutor of Regent's Park, New, and Hackney Colleges.

HUMILITY.

Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

In Caius College, Cambridge, there are three gateways that span the Via Honoris; and the first is the gate of Humility. Humility is most needed and least commonly found at the beginning of life. It is difficult for a young man to realise that his experience of men and things is comparatively limited. To those of older years experiences are dwarfed in the tract of time; to the young they loom vast, and fill the scene. Consequently it is not always easy for the young to defer to those whose experience is wider than their own.

For the schoolboy who has been brought up in an atmosphere of discipline it is an easier task. But let us suppose the case of a young man who has long broken with the habits of the schoolroom. His opinion has, at any rate in his own estimation, come to have some weight, and merits deferential consideration. He has asserted his independence and exercised it, unquestioned. He has been received into the membership of his church, and has taken an active part in its work. The continual approbation of too indulgent friends, at first a pleasant stimulus, has at last become a necessity. Unless he is a man of rare calibre the results of this environment will be evident in traces of egotism. Mannerisms will develop; the affectation, so obtrusive of self, so fatal to the idea of service, so opposed to the principles of self-abnegation, becomes deeply rooted.

At this stage of his growth he is suddenly transplanted. He finds himself, as a student, again in a bracing atmosphere of discipline. The mannerisms he cultivated, and which his friends condoned, are now openly condemned; his independence of movement is limited; his opinions are either not esteemed above those of his fellows, or else they are entirely disregarded. He has to submit to certain rules: if he breaks them he is not excused on the plea of superiority of character but is for this very reason the more severely reprimanded. His whole nature rebels. He feels that the authorities are altogether wanting in sympathy and wisdom. He is in the right, they are in the wrong. He may be led to enact scenes between himself and his superiors in which he figures as a champion of liberty, and they as the unjust oppressors. Or if he is of a delicate nature he will regard his fault as a perpetual barrier between himself and his corrector.

The result in either case is due to egotism. He cannot see in rebuke anything but a personal insult. Once let him recognise that he is one of many, a member of a body, and he will perceive in all correction, however unwisely it may be administered, an attempt to preserve the well-being of the community; and, when he comprehends this, his egotism may be modified; nay, he may even be glad that there was a voice to indicate where the body ailed. But as long as egotism remains it will subtly oppose our peace of mind: either the breath of flattery or the rude winds of rebuke are continually ruffling the surface of the egotistic soul, distorting its views even of earthly things which are near, much more destroying the all too transitory reflections and adumbrations of the heavenly things that are far off.

Lowliness and meekness—these are two virtues of prime necessity in the Christian life. Scorned by the ancient heathen world, they are qualities of distinctly Christian origin. In our Master they were eminent; in his disciples they must not be wanting. In the life of Catherine of Siena a striking instance of humility is recorded: "Once a man of God came from Florence to examine personally what had been told him of her. She was then, on account of severe illness, extended on the planks that served her as a bed. To test her humility he began to administer to her the most harsh and humiliating reproofs. She bowed her head, and listened submissively to the end without changing countenance, and assured him she felt very grateful for what he had said. Her visitor exclaimed, after he had left her: 'She is pure gold without alloy.'"* "For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? But if when ye do well and suffer for it ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God."

In our practice of this virtue let us see to it that we practise it with our hearts in all sincerity. For there is nothing more hateful in a man than mock humility—that sort of humility which seems continually to say, "I am confident that I am right, and that everybody else is more or less mistaken, but I will nevertheless endure."

False humility is only veiled egotism. It shows as ugly as true humility shows fair through all a man's conduct. Learning is impossible for the proud. Humility makes mind and soul like a deep rich soil, in which the seeds of knowledge will take root and bear fruit a hundredfold. But to teach the proud is to sow one's seeds on adamant.

COLPORTAGE IN PERU.

The work of the Bible colporteur has many advantages and interesting features. Something to sell gives the pretext for calling, and on offering the Bible the great subject may be at once introduced. Then may follow conversation direct and personal. From such interviews many of the brethren date their first serious impressions, for in most cases in these countries the Bible colporteur is the herald of the Gospel.

On the other hand, the work has its peculiar trials. The colporteur often finds himself alone, in the midst of overwhelming temptations—away from the helpful meeting or other fellowship of believers; bearing the reproach of Christ in the shape of personal insult and contempt, both for himself and the precious Book he offers. The best idea of the work, however, will be gathered from facts now transpiring.

Since the liberation in May last of the Bibles so long detained in the Custom House here, three more consignments have been cleared without any trouble, and the work, despite opposition, has gone on with more or less of success.

For the present we will follow the men who went south, to the departments of Arequipa and Cuzco, where clerical influence is more dominant than in any other parts of Peru. On July 13 they took steamer here, and after three days disembarked at the small port town of Mollendo. There the subprefect received them favourably, and they

SOLD BOOKS WITHOUT ANY HINDRANCE.

Not so at Arequipa, the next town they reached, about eight and a-half hours distant by train. I might say here that some years ago three of our men were thrown into prison there at the instance of the Bishop, without cause assigned, and after three weeks released by order of the supreme Government at Lima. In the present case the men were provided with a letter from Mr. Milne, calling the attention of the Prefect to the illegal procedure of a predecessor, and the decision of the supreme Government in the matter, and requesting him in the present instance to protect the men in the free exercise of their constitutional rights. In addition to this, they were furnished each with a safe conduct from the Minister of Government at Lima.

The day after their arrival they presented themselves at the Prefecture, but there was no time to give them a hearing. Next day they were favoured with an interview of five minutes, presented their letters and credentials, and agreed to return. The following day the Prefect said decidedly, that by his order they were forbidden to sell a single book.

Thinking it useless to fight against such odds, and that further persisting would cause only delay, they left Arequipa, not having opened their boxes, crossed the Cordillera at a height of 14,600 feet and came to Puno on Lake Titicaca. Here there was no opposition to speak of. The vicar bought some books and was favourably disposed, but the people generally were poor, many of them Quichna or Aymara Indians who could not speak, much less read Spanish.

Their next station was the town of Sicuani, the present terminus of the railway, and about three days' journey by mule distant from Cuzco. In the train they had an interesting interview with a friar, who bought a Bible and New Testament and a portion. They canvassed the town of Sicuani for some days, meeting very little to encourage them, and had began to make arrangements for their departure, when an official with three soldiers came to their hotel, requesting their appearance before the authorities. They accompanied him, and either by mistake or intentionally, were taken to the house of the priest and conducted to an inner room where the priest and two bare-footed friars were apparently waiting for them. After some further conversation with this cleric, they were taken then to the Prefecture, where they told their business, showed their credentials, safe conduct, etc., and asked why they had been sent for. He examined the papers they gave him, and explained that the priest had written to him, defaming their character, and requesting them to appear; that the officer had made a mistake in taking them to the priest's house, which he hoped they would excuse; and that he was ready to give them every liberty and assistance in their work. He then asked if they would be willing to have a public conference with the priest, to which they agreed.

A good deal of discussion took place, and eventually the audience became noisy in their hearty approval of the colporteur. "Let us have the Bible by the thousand," they said. "Let us have liberty of worship, liberty of the press, liberty for the people, etc., etc." The result of it has been that was raised for Señor Irigoyen who, at the request of the people generally, has remained until now. He has held meetings (with closed doors) and preached regularly. They have sent a formal petition to Dr. Wood for a preacher and teacher, and we are glad to know that their desire will soon be realised.

All this happened while the excitement was rising in Cuzco. Our colporteur has now been there two-and-a-half months, and of all the letters sent both from Mr. Milne, from Dr. Wood, and from his family, he had not received one at his last date of writing, September 17. When his place is supplied there he is ready to make another effort in Cuzco.

Callao, October. HARRIET L. MILNE.

THE LATE MRS. ALEXANDER.—The Duchess of Abercorn has issued an appeal asking for subscriptions to build almshouses, at Londonderry, for the poor of all denominations, to the memory of Mrs. Alexander. Subscriptions may be sent to the Duchess of Abercorn, at Baronscourt, co. Tyrone, or Hampden House, Green-street, W.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.—This Society has continued day and night to give the hand of welcome and succour to every suitable applicant who has sought admission. Nearly 1000 have been received into the various homes established for their protection and reclamation. It is desired to raise the £500 needed to meet the expenses of the year's work. Nearly 40,000 have been assisted to make a fresh start in life since 1857, and the training while in the homes is both Christian and industrial. The secretary is Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, N.W.

WHEATSHEAF HALL, LAMBETH.

Old Vauxhall Gardens have long vanished; in their place has arisen, behind the river frontage of wharves and works, long rows of small houses, densely populated by railway, pottery, and gasworks employés; and in some corners by people who never work at all if they can possibly help it. One thoroughly familiar with the locality remarks that "some of the worst groups of poverty, immorality, and irreligion in South London" are to be found in and around Vauxhall.

In the midst of this neglect and squalor a very remarkable work has grown up quietly, and spread out in vigorous branches. Some ten years ago Mr. W. S. Caine had his attention called to the condition of the district, and finding in Wheatsheaf-lane (originally a narrow footpath running through corn fields) an ancient tumble-down villa, he secured it, put it in something like repair, and began work. At the first meeting seventeen persons were present, and after an address on aggressive work eleven of these remained behind to put down their names as willing to unite in earnest endeavour "to bring the sweetness and light of the Gospel into the neighbourhood." In the forefront and from the outset was set "the need of personal conversion to God, as the one foundation of success." The original eleven have now become 230, united in Christian service according to ability and opportunity. In this way the Lambeth Mission Halls have become the centre of all manner of Christian, social, and temperance effort.

Says Mr. Caine:—"Our members are all working members, men and women who have come to us, not from other churches, but from outside the church altogether. It is a very moderate estimate to say that at least seventy per cent. of our members have been converted to God in the Hall itself, which to them, inconvenient, humble and ugly though it be, is the dearest spot on earth, and their love for the place and devotion to its work is both singular and very pathetic. We can honestly claim to have dug the most of our workers from the mass of irreligion with which we are surrounded."

Visiting last week the headquarters of these operations, I found myself not far from Vauxhall Station, turning into a narrow lane with a large public-house at the corner. Inquiry elicited the curious fact that at each end of this lane is a public-house, owned by a former M.P., while in the lane itself is the great "Anti Public-house" Mission, also carried on by an ex-M.P. All three were Liberal members of the last Parliament, while none of the three gained seats in the present. Next to the preaching of the Gospel, the grand business of the Wheatsheaf Hall is to counteract the ruin wrought by its two imposing neighbours.

In this hall, as I learned from the secretary, Mr. Grubb, an amount of work is carried on wholly disproportionate to the accommodation provided. Besides, the cottage is 100 years old, and is likely to tumble about the ears of those using it. Already some of the rooms are shut up as unsafe. The principal meetings are held in a hall Mr. Caine put up some years ago in the back garden. Still the place was too strait. A house was taken close by in Hartington-road for Bible classes, cottage and prayer meetings, and similar operations, while further off is another mission branch known as Caine Hall.

It is delightful to find that the whole work is ready for revival. Rev. Robert Balgarnie was closing, on the day of my visit, a special mission, and it seems as if large numbers of the young people were just waiting for decision—nearly one hundred have been gathered in and are linking themselves in Christian fellowship and service. To show how much is being done under the utmost difficulties, I may note that "the work carried on in these very inefficient premises consists of three Sunday-schools, ith forty-five teachers and 700 scholars, three children's services, three Bible classes for adults with 130 members, Christian Endeavour Society, four Sunday services attended by from 500 to 600 adults, two weekly temperance meetings, three Bands of Hope, one of which, the Wheatsheaf, is the largest in South London, two mothers' meetings, a young men's club, a young women's club, a girls' guild, slate clubs of over 500 members, and a great number of other sick and benefit societies too many to detail. It is impossible to describe the congestion which prevails and the difficulties of accommodation."

In view of the great work yet to be done, the vast variety of operations in progress, the need for larger room, and the dilapidated and unfit state of the present premises, efforts are being made to build a new hall, to seat 700, with a smaller hall and class rooms. The great success which has attended the work has made this new building imperatively necessary. Mr. and Mrs. Caine have already raised over £2500, and earnest endeavours are being made to raise the last £1000 required to set the work going and provide the accommodation so sorely needed for a work God has been pleased richly to bless. Communications may be addressed, Mr. W. S. Caine, 33, Northside, Clapham Common, S.W.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

The twenty-fourth annual meeting in connection with the Orphan Homes of Scotland was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, last week. Sir Thomas Glen Coats, Bart., who presided, said they all sympathised most heartily with Mr. Quarrier in the work in which he was engaged—a work which may be regarded as the most hopeful that is being done in this generation in bringing in not the lapsed but those who might fall into a lapsed state.

Dr. Walter Downie, in moving the adoption of the report of the consumptive homes, said that the necessity for some such accommodation as that being provided by Mr. Quarrier had long been recognised by medical men, and it was to be hoped that the necessary funds would soon be forthcoming.

Bailie Chisholm, in moving the adoption of the general reports, remarked on the absolutely voluntary nature of the gifts towards the support of the Orphan Homes, and the varied and wide area from which they came. The contributions had been sufficient for the work, but not a penny more. If these children were not laid hold of by Mr. Quarrier, and cared for by him, they would in very many cases develop into far worse types of life than that of mere poverty—into the type of the vicious and the criminal. The money contributed towards the Orphan Homes represented about a penny in the pound of rental in Glasgow, but were the children not treated as Mr. Quarrier treated them they would cost the city and the country at large a very much larger sum.

Mr. Quarrier said the history of the past year was a continuation of the old story that was ever new—the needs of the work had been supplied from the beginning to the end. The year had really been very successful and prosperous. In addition to the work of the children, there had been the work in connection with the consumptive hospitals. Every third child they got into the Homes came of consumptive parents. Did they live? Of course they lived, because they were lifted out of the horrible pit that was seething around them and made to stand solid and straight by fresh air, good food, and surroundings that went to make up health. He went on to say that the consumptive homes would be constructed on the most scientific principles. In all, he would require another £45,000 to build hospital accommodation for 200 patients, each with a separate bedroom. During the year they had taken in 400 additional children, making in all 1400 dealt with in the twelve months. He thanked all who had helped the work by their gifts and sympathy, and said that as he had got during the past year for all purposes the £28,000 he had aimed at, so now he aimed at £35,000 for the ensuing year, and expected to get it.

LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE.

The annual meeting of Livingstone College, which was held on Friday afternoon, was a specially important occasion, as the opportunity was taken for the formal opening of the new premises, 31 and 33, Hamfrith-road, Stratford, E., by Captain Lugard and Rev. Horace Waller. A conversazione was held at the College at four o'clock, at which a large number of friends prominently connected with foreign missions were present. Some explanation of the work of the Medical Mission connected with the College was given by Mr. McAdam Eccles, the vice-principal, and then Rev. Horace Waller spoke words of hearty sympathy with the work.

Captain Lugard, in a few appropriate sentences, declared the new premises of the College open.

A large meeting was held in the Conference Hall, Rev. H. E. Fox, honorary secretary of the Church Missionary Society, occupying the chair. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, secretary of the London Missionary Society, was the first to address the meeting. After referring to the value of medical knowledge for missionaries, he said that a medical qualification was not needed in all parts of the mission field, yet some knowledge of medicine was needed, as the people were often ignorant of the most rudimentary principles of treatment. The London Missionary Society made it a rule for all their missionaries who were going to the South Seas to have some months' training in medicine. There had always been a difficulty in obtaining such knowledge for missionaries. He had most heartily welcomed the foundation of Livingstone College, and the directors of the L.M.S. had shown their approval in the most practical way, by sending three men last year, and three men for the present year. Those who had been at the College last year expressed again and again their appreciation of the work done. They had gained, he believed, great profit from their stay in the College, where they had not only had the great advantage of the medical and surgical training, but were all the time under Christian influence.

Captain Lugard, in an address on British rule in Africa, said he had seen a large number of missionaries in the Dark Continent, and felt that medical missionaries got most in touch with the natives. He described what he saw and heard while staying at the house of Dr. Laws, of the Free Church of Scotland Mission, Livingstonia. He said: We should remember, in dealing with Africa, that we are dealing with a very childlike people, with the most rudimentary conception of an abstract idea. It is hard to realise how literally that is the case. A concrete idea presents itself to the eye, to the touch; but an abstract idea is very hard to impress on their minds. The more abstract ideas of our religion are very hard to impress on such a people. In the initial stages, and until confidence is gained, we should teach them simple facts, gradually leading to higher ones. Therefore, I think that the medical missionaries are indirectly useful there, for by gaining access to the homes of the people you gain access to the coming generation, and I look upon the education of the children of Africa as of vastly greater importance than the education of adults. You may or may not agree with me, but that is my personal view, because the life of the adult is extremely precarious in Africa. The speaker referred to the most serious diseases prevalent in Africa, and some of the measures needful for the preservation of health.

Dr. Harford Battersby followed with an outline of the report of the year's work. In addition to the ordinary lectures on medical and surgical subjects, a special point is made of detailed instruction in the diseases of tropical climates, and lectures are given by those who have been in India, China, and Africa respectively. The medical mission connected with the College, carried on partly in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes, is crippled for lack of funds.

THE WALDENSIAN CHURCH.

By Rev. R. Leitch, M.A., Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England.

It was my happy privilege to visit the Church of the Vaudois, in the Piedmontese Alps, a few weeks ago, to attend as a deputy to its annual Synodical meeting at Torre Pellice, in the valley of Lucerna, and to visit several of its congregations and pastors. The visit was an enjoyable and profitable one. The Synod lasted five days, and all its proceedings were characterised by great harmony, much Christian earnestness, and a supreme desire to extend the Redeemer's Kingdom at home and abroad. The reports that were submitted to this Court of the Church were, on the whole, very satisfactory. They showed that the Church was making progress numerically, and that very special attention was being paid to the religious education of the young. Sunday-schools and Bible-classes appear to be in a state of great efficiency. Representatives, to the number of eight, from various sections of the Church of Christ in Great Britain and the Continent of Europe addressed the Synod on one of the days of its meetings, and all were most cordially received. Though the deputies were Scotch, English, French, Swiss, Italian, Dutch, German, yet I venture to say that no one could have told from the Christian sentiments that were expressed, except perhaps from our dialect from what country we hailed. So much for the unity of Protestant Christendom. Rev. Dr. Geymonat, of Florence, the Moderator, returned thanks to all the deputies in most appropriate terms, and his remarks received the most cordial approval of a crowded and apparently deeply interested assembly.

My impressions of all I heard at the Synod, and witnessed in the Waldensian Valleys, which I afterwards visited, were exceedingly favourable. I visited eight of the churches of the valleys; I conversed with the pastors, and on one occasion spent an evening under the hospitable roof of a Waldensian pastor's manse. I found the ministers to be scholarly and pious men, holding strictly evangelical views of Divine truth. Their places of worship are very plain and unadorned, but suitable for all the purposes of Christian worship. They are marked by the entire or Ritualistic; one sees in them no images, no crucifixes, no altar so-called, no candles, and even no flowers. The worship, too, is characterised by great Christain simplicity. It consists of singing, prayer, the reading of the Scriptures, and the preaching of the Word. The churches are well attended on the Lord's day. In one or two cases I observed that forms had been put in the passages, as the pews were unable to hold all those who came to the services. At Torre Pellice, I stayed with Miss Beckwith, the daughter of General Beckwith, whose name is a household word in the Waldensian valleys. In almost every minister's manse, and in almost every peasant's cottage, the portrait of General Beckwith is to be seen. Can anyone wonder at this? What General Beckwith, though an Englishman, and a member of the Episcopal Church of this country, did for the Waldenses, it would take whole volumes to narrate. He was instrumental in building many churches, manses, and schools. He spent his time, his energies, and his means in promoting the intellectual, social, and religious welfare of this most interesting people. His daughter is following in her father's footsteps. Her kindness to me, and to other deputies, we shall never forget.

The Waldensian Church has, I believe, a great future before it. The whole of Italy is now open to it, and if it had only sufficient resources, it might extend its operations over a wide area. It evidently has the confidence and the respect of the Italian people. Roman Catholics in many cases speak favourably of it, and whilst they do not subscribe to its religious tenets, they nevertheless admire and praise its works of Christian philanthropy. Its pastors, too, are esteemed by them, as they believe them to be men animated by the love of God and of irreproachable character. The motto of that Church is still that which it has borne for many centuries, viz., "Lux lucet in tenebris." May prayer go up to the Throne of Grace, that the light of saving truth which it seeks to suffuse may spread far and near, and that many may be led to "rejoice in that light," and give praise to Him who in Italy, as well as everywhere else, is the only true Light and Life of human souls.

THE NATIONAL REFUGES.

It is impossible to peruse the fifty-second annual report of this society without feeling devoutly thankful that so much solid work is being accomplished on behalf of homeless and destitute children. We say solid work, because the operations of this old-established institution are not of a mere surface nature. The benefits conferred upon each poor boy and girl received are thorough and abiding. A child, once under the care of the National Refuges, is not turned adrift upon the world until well able to fight the battle of life. The boys in the homes on shore are not only given a rudimentary education, with sound religious training, but are technically instructed in tailoring, shoemaking, carpentering, gardening, farming, and housework, and each home has its instrumental band. The girls are specially trained for domestic service. They do all the household work in connection with their Homes, make and mend their own garments, and are taught knitting and darning. The three R's are efficiently taught under government inspection.

The boys' homes are situated as follows:—Shaftesbury House, 164, Shaftesbury avenue, London, W.C.; Fordham House (for working boys), 164A, Shaftesbury-avenue; Fortescue House, Twickenham; Farm School and Shaftesbury School, Bisley, Surrey. The Girls' Homes are:—Ealing House School, St. Mary's-road, Ealing; and Sudbury Hall, Sudbury, near Harrow. There are also the popular training ships Arethusa and Chichester, moored off Greenhithe, Kent, and the Training Ship's Depôt, at 100, East India Dock-road.

Nearly 900 boys and girls are now being maintained, educated, and trained in these various homes and ships. The total number of children admitted from 1843—when the society was established—to the end of 1894, was 13,538, viz., 11,285 boys and 2253 girls. The annual report contains the yearly balance-sheet, and is, as usual, a model of clearness and simplicity. A concise balance-sheet, duly certified by chartered accountants, shows the receipts for 1894 to be £27,988 0s. 5d. The payments, including £5000 paid off the mortgage debt, amount to £27,805 11s. 5d. An urgent appeal is made for help to clear off the remaining debt of £3000.

All societies have their periods of depression; but it is gratifying to find the Refuges and ships—presided over for so many years by recovering from the effects of recent commercial depression; and we trust that with the revival of trade there may come such increased support that this solid work may be carried on free of debt.

Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, the secretary, may be seen at the London office, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, and will be happy to give all needed information, either as to the administration of the Society or as regards the admission of children to the homes and ships. We may here emphasise the fact that no votes are needed. This will, indeed, be welcome news to those philanthropic friends who delight in undertaking personally the arduous task of rescue work.

No time is lost in dealing with urgent cases. In very special instances admission is granted on the very day of application. The committee carefully consider all applications, and receive cases according to degree of destitution, the most urgent having the first claim. The age of admission is from ten to thirteen. Boys for the ships must be between thirteen and a-half and sixteen years of age. Since the establishment of the training ships in 1866—a most important branch of the society—no less than 5889 lads have been trained for a seafaring life. Of this number, 4470 young sailors have been drafted into the merchant service, 566 have joined the Royal Navy, and the remainder have entered the Royal Marines, army, and other service. The society's publications record many heroic deeds performed by these gallant young salts, and when it is remembered from what depths of poverty these "homeless boys of London" are rescued, it is highly gratifying to hear of them as attaining good positions in their profession. Many of the Arethusa "old boys" are now in command of vessels. A sextant is presented to each one on gaining the mate's certificate. The are deeply interesting. Take, for example, the following:—Writing from H.M.S. Ganges, off Falmouth, "C. L. B." says: "The navy has done a good turn for me. I am like a horse! I have started growing since being fed on cocoa and fat pork. I advise some of the boys to join; they might think it rather hard lines in the navy, but I have experienced it nineteen months, and it agrees with me. I did not like the word navy, but it has made a man of me."

Another lad, writing from the Royal Marine Depôt, Walmer, says: "I am very glad to say I like the Marines, and I get on with the bugle very nicely. The drum-major says that I am one of the best buglers in the depôt."

Writing from the s.s. Torridon, off Sharpness, an Arethusa lad says: "It was a good day for me when I joined this ship. The mate has promised to take me for'ard when I can steer the ship thoroughly. I can steer her now, both with wheel and steam, but not sufficient for bad weather, and that will give me my ordinary seaman's discharge. I have KEPT CLEAR OF ALL OFFENCES.

I intend to do four years before the mast, and then, if I think I am proficient enough, I shall go up for second mate's certificate. This ship has been very lucky. She has always managed to get out of the storms in time. We just got a touch of the gale of the 27th October in the Bay, and again off Cape Matapan, and we had the wind in a favourable course coming up the Bristol Channel. We had the wind on the port quarter, and following big sea waves as high as our lower masts, but she rode it beautifully."

The report teems with living interest as we read the graphic letters from boys and girls formerly under the care of the National Refuges; and those of our readers who will write to the secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, will promptly receive a copy of the report. Its perusal can only have one result—an increased support to these deserving homes and training ships.

GERMAN PEACE UNION.—The annual meeting of the German Peace Union was held recently in Berlin, and was very influentially attended by representatives from various parts of the Empire. Special encouragement was given to the editor of the excellent monthly serial, entitled Monatliche Friedens-Korrespondenz, so ably conducted by Herr Franz Wirth, of Frankfort. This journal is unsurpassed on the Continent for its condensed and diligently collected peace intelligence, and well deserves the honour of being regarded as the special organ of the German Peace Union. It is in future to be published at Berlin. It is regularly posted to 600 German, Austrian, and Swiss journals, and to 3,000 members of the Peace Union.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 1.

"The Lord will show who are His, and who is holy, and will cause Him to come near unto Him."—Num. xvi. 5.

It was on these words that the Psalmist founded his exclamation, "Blessed is the man whom Thou choosest, and causest to approach unto Thee." This is what we all need. We often endeavour to approach unto God, but meet with many disappointments. Thomas Welsh said, on one occasion, that he had been wrestling to obtain access from six in the morning until nine! There is something better. If you are his, you may humbly count on God to cause you to come near.

In your morning prayer, or at any other time which you set apart for devotion, let this be the cry of your soul: "My God, cause me to come near." When for long you have been dwelling afar off, and the distance threatens to become chronic or permanent, let this again be your petition: "Cause me to come near." And throughout the rush of daily life, let your dependence be on Him who alone can cause you to come near, so that you may dwell in his courts.

But God cannot do this unless the soul is utterly surrendered to be his. We must be unanchored and unbeached if the tide is to bear us on its bosom. We must be free from the touch of other hands if we are to respond to his. We must sit loosely by the things of the earth to feel the drawing of heaven. This is, in part, the meaning of holiness. "Who are his and who is holy?" Separation to God and from sin; give us these, then draw us, and we will run after Thee!

MONDAY, DECEMBER 2.

"The man whom I shall choose, his rod shall bud."—Num. xvii. 5.

There was deep significance in this method of indicating the man of God's choice. Too many have taken God's election as referring exclusively to their enjoyment of God's grace and their preservation to his heavenly kingdom. Here we are taught that one of its chief results will be, and must be, buds, blossoms, and fruit. "The rod of Aaron budded, and bloomed, blossomed, and bare ripe almonds." It would almost seem that spring, summer, and autumn, the promise, maturity, and fruit, were simultaneously present in that marvellous rod. So should it be in those who have been chosen in Christ to be holy.

The bud of spring.—There is a perennial freshness in the true saint. He may be old in years, but his leaf is green with vernal tenderness, and there are the budding promises of richer and better things than he has yet attained. The youths faint, and are weary, but he renews his strength. The outward man decayeth, but the inward renews his youth like an eagle's.

The blossom of early summer.—There is exquisite beauty in the blossom of orchard and garden. No painter has ever yet learnt God's secret of mixing his colours. Such is the beauty of the character of the believer. Men say involuntarily, "How attractive, how beautiful."

The fruit of autumn.—That we should bear fruit is the end of Christ in our redemption and discipline. We can only do it in fellowship with Himself. He must bear it through us. From me is thy fruit found. "I have chosen you, that ye should go and bear fruit, and that your fruit should remain."

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 3.

"I am thy portion and thine inheritance."
Num. xviii. 20.

We are God's portion and He is ours. The Lord's portion is his people, Israel is the lot of his inheritance; and He says to the soul I am thy Portion and thine Inheritance. We, with all we have, for God; and God, with all He has, for us. "Heirs of God."

We are like settlers on the fringe of their estate.—The emigrant to the far Far West has a plot of land allotted to him, but how little does he know of its contents.—There may be coal or iron-ore, or rivers full of fish, or a rich soil; he settles on the outskirts, but every year he pushes his fences further back to take in more of the land, which is all his, but is not yet brought into use, or under cultivation. So each year we should increase in the knowledge of what God is, and of what He is willing to be to us. Not as though we were already perfect, but we follow on to apprehend that for which we were apprehended, and to be filled full with his grace and heavenly benediction.

Our possession of God will largely depend on his of us. There are some who wonder God is so much more to others than to them. Is not the answer to be found in their withholding so much of what they might yield up to his occupation and use? If you would have all from God, you must give all to God. Your enjoyment of God will be in precise proportion to the deepening and widening consecration of your life.

Why should any of us be poor, or strengthless, or fearful, when all the Godhead is stored in Jesus, and awaits our appropriation?

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 4.

"For the unclean, they shall take of the ashes."—Num. xix. 17.

It was very easy to become unclean without realising it. To touch a corpse, to be in the same room as the dead, to stumble over a grave, was enough to defile the Israelite, and excommunicate him from the tabernacle with its holy rites. Could anything more graphically set forth the contagiousness of sin? We cannot be in contact with those who are dead in trespasses and sins, or breathe air defiled by their filthy speech, or read books which contain their thoughts, without suffering for it.

This is the reason why, at the end of the day, we often feel unable to pray, or hold fellowship with God: we are excluded from the most Holy Place, because of this defilement. Indeed, there is only one way of escaping it, and that is in being covered, hermetically sealed, by the Spirit of God. "By whom ye were sealed" (v. 15).

For this reason also, we should perpetually seek fresh cleansing in the precious blood of Christ. He is represented in this heifer without spot, slain in its prime, whose ashes were mingled in running water to testify their perpetual efficacy and freshness. If the ashes of an heifer availed for the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ cleanse our consciences! Ask perpetually for the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ, that you may have access with confidence into the Most Holy Place.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5.

"Speak ye to the rock . . . and Moses smote the rock twice, and water came out abundantly."—Num. xx. 11.

What a miracle of grace is here! Nothing could have been more explicit than the Divine command that Moses should, on this occasion, simply speak to the rock. We cannot fathom the deep reason; perhaps it was because the Spiritual Rock of our salvation could not be smitten by the soldier's spear twice. "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." Moreover, we are taught to wait on God each time we perform duties which appear similar, for the ways in which they should be performed may vary widely. It is clear, whatever the reason, that Moses was to speak, not smite.

However, he grievously disobeyed, largely probably because he could not believe that mere speech could suffice for the miracle. He thought that he must do more to aid God, not realising how slight a part man's is in the Divine esteem. No flesh may glory in his presence. God must be all in all. A word is enough; God will do the rest.

But, in spite of his irritation, disobedience, and unbelief, the water gushed out. The sin of the servant did not annul the love and faithfulness of God. "If we believe not, He remaineth faithful." It is a sweet lesson. We are worthless and unprofitable servants; we fail to believe and obey. But God's grace flows over the bank, and inundates the wilderness with crystal streams. The Psalmist says the waters did not trickle, they gushed out. Oh! miracle of Divine faithfulness! But Moses himself had to pay the penalty in later years. Disobedience must bring ultimate punishment.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 6.

"Spring up, O well."—Num. xxi. 17.

This was a sweet song. It must have been a stirring scene, when Israel, in its thousands, sang forth this command to the waters that were under the earth, to show themselves, to the musical accompaniment of the gushing rill.

Spring up, O well, in our hearts.—Too long has the soil been arid and bare. A great drought has smitten it, and devoured every green thing. The flowers wither, the fruit falls. But Jesus promised to open in believing hearts a well, the waters of which should spring up unto eternal life. Not a stagnant pool, but a spring. Not a failing Cherith, but a perennial Siloam. Let that promise be realised in us here, and now; and if we have permitted rubbish to accumulate, or the weeds to grow rank, may we have grace to put them away, that there may be a clear course for the living water.

Spring up, O well, in the Church of God.—This is a petition with which we may enter the place of worship where we meet God's people. Spring up, O well, to day. With this petition, we may plead for distant mission stations, and for the entire Church. Jesus dug the well with the staff of his cross, but we wish that the Spirit, who is as a fountain of living water, fed from eternity and returning to its source, may spring up within it with greater volume and force.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7.

"Have I now any power at all?"—Num. xxii. 38.

Balaam made a remarkable confession when he spoke like this. He had come a long distance, and was set on winning Balak's money, if he could by cursing the people whom God loved. But he found himself withheld by a mysterious restraint, which he could not break through. From height to height he went, hoping that a fresh view of Israel would reverse into a curse, the blessing his lips had been constrained to give, but in vain. He had no power at all.

We are reminded of the words of our Lord, "Thou couldst have no power against Me, unless it had been given thee from above." Also of the experience of Job, in which Satan had to come back for authority to touch his flesh. Evidently there is a limit beyond which Satan cannot go. God does not allow him to try us beyond what we are able to bear or combat.

It is well to live inside God. Put God between you and everything. Let Him be your engirding river, your wall of fire, your encompassing squadron. Then as the curses of the enemy fall towards you, they will be transformed to blessings; and the shower of cinders will reach you as a rain of sweet flowers. "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue they shall rise against thee in judgment thou shall condemn."

MARSEILLES.—Capt. A. Walker writes from the Sailors' Home and Institute, Marseilles:—If any of your readers could send us a few papers we should be very glad indeed. Daily, weekly, monthly, religious or secular journals, are always welcome, as our seamen appreciate more than one can tell a bit of reading matter. We have something like 30,000 seamen here annually in British vessels, and always sick men in hospital, and now and again a few in prison. Our chaplain and Scripture-reader visit the shipping regularly and hold services on board.

DAVID AND GOLIATH.—1 Sam. xvii. 38-51.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 47.

SINCE Saul's disobedience and consequent rejection the Philistines had been continually making war against the Israelites (xiv. 52). The scene of this story was the upper part of the valley of Elah, near to Shocoh. It was about fourteen miles-south-west of Jerusalem, and about ten from Bethlehem. The hills on either side of the valley were over 700ft. high. A ravine wound through the midst of the valley, on either side of which the two armies were pitched—the Philistines on the southern slopes, and Saul's army on the northern.

The proposal to decide the issue by single combat was made by Goliath, in the boastful confidence inspired by his giant strength. Picture him—his height six cubits and a span (4), which would be equal to nine feet nine inches; his brazen armour (including a helmet which, if like the Egyptian helmets, "had the appearance of a row of feathers, set in a metal band, to which were attached scales of the same material, for the defence of the back of the neck and the sides of the face"; a coat of mail, whose weight was five thousand shekels, about equal to a hundred and fifty-seven pounds avoirdupois); his legs were protected by metal greaves, and before him a man carried a shield, large enough to defend his whole body. His weapons consisted of target or javelin (6); a heavy spear, the metal part of which weighed six hundred shekels, or about nineteen pounds avoirdupois; and a sword.

For forty days this giant hurled his defiance against Israel, and among all Saul's army not one was found willing to accept the challenge.

At length a champion appeared in the person of David. He was Divinely sent, for it was no mere accidental circumstance that he should visit his brethren on the fortieth day of Goliath's challenge. It was late enough for the helplessness of Israel's host to have been proved, yet not too late for the deliverance they needed. He was Divinely fitted, for he possessed those qualities of humility, meekness, faith, and courage which are the condition on which God does exploits by men. To all outward seeming the contest is unfair, the combatants are unequally matched. What can a stripling not out of his teens do against such a giant as Goliath?

His weapons were such as to excite the disdain of the Philistine, but such as gave every opportunity for God to work. He tried, but only to reject, the armour of Saul (38, 39), and went forth as a shepherd lad, armed with the staff by which he had defended his sheep; a scrip, or wallet made of skin, in which he put his five smooth stones, and a sling, a weapon out of which a practised man could hurl stones with surest aim. His equipment looks very poor in comparison with that of the giant; but he was wise in choosing only those weapons with which he was familiar.

Now the combatants approach one another. Goliath only to treat his opponent with disdain. His triumph appears sure before the battle begins, and already he tells how he will dispose of the flesh of David (41-44). David's confidence is not less strong (45-47). But the difference between them is that Goliath's confidence is in his strength and armour and weapons; David's is in his God. "The Lord will deliver thee" (46), "the battle is the Lord's, and He will give you into our hands" (47). Such boasting will never be put to confusion.

Tell the story of the actual conflict—the approach of the giant, the agility of David, the whizz of the stone straight to its mark in the part of the giant's forehead unprotected by the helmet, the fall of the champion, and the removal of his head by means of his own sword (49-51).

The story has many applications. First, it reminds us of the defeat which our Champion obtained against our great adversary. His victory is the victory of all his people. Next, it illustrates to us the fact that there are giants opposing us. In our own hearts are Pride, Disobedience, Sloth, Evil Temper, Envy, and Doubt. In the world around us are the giant evils of Vice, Indifference, Scepticism, Intemperance, Worldliness. All these are to be met and vanquished only through confidence in the name of the Lord. Let the battle be recognised as his, and the victory is sure.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The workers' monthly conference of the South London branch of this mission was held on Tuesday week, in the Pilgrim Fathers' Memorial Church, New Kent-road. After tea, the pastor, Rev. F. Docker, took the chair, and opened the proceedings. Mr. John Kirk then gave an address on practical work. Short accounts of open-air operations followed, showing much useful work in South London.

For the Young.

FINDING JESUS.

"Oh, that I knew where I might find Him!"—Job. xxiii. 3.

A LADY, on going into the dining-room one Sunday evening, found her young niece standing over a large family Bible, which lay open before her on the table. But as she stood there her face was flooded by tears. The little girl had been that day to God's house, and had kept her thoughts fixed upon the service. She knew that the evil one tempts us to inattention, but that if we resist him we avoid the sin, and after feel a greater interest in what is good. And so it proved, for she took away with her a very important part of the sermon.

"What is the matter, love?" asked her kind aunt. And the girl was too much in earnest not to seize thankfully at any proffered help. So, with a fresh burst of tears, she exclaimed, "I cannot find Jesus!"

Poor child; did she expect to see his actual body in the sacred volume? That is never upon earth now in any form. He is watching his own from the glory above, never forgetting them, and never turning away. And He saw right down into the depths of that anxious little heart.

The aunt then turned those blessed pages—which had long been familiar to her—and showed the young seeker how the Saviour does indeed speak to us, by his Holy Word ("word" you see). "Read that verse, my darling." "Come unto Me...and I will give you rest." "Whosoever will, let him come." "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; yea, come, buy...milk without money and without price!"

"You see, dear, the gracious Redeemer who 'willeth...that all should come to repentance,' calls us over and over again. Those texts apply to the young as well as to grown-up people. But we will find some now, spoken only for children." The little maid read eagerly the next verses that were pointed out, and which were these: "He took a child" (Mark ix. 36). "He called a little child unto Him" (Matt. xviii. 2). "And Jesus said, Suffer the little children to come unto Me" (Luke xviii. 16).

"You know what 'suffer' means, here?"

"Yes, auntie, 'let.' 'Let them come.'"

"Now, find Mark x. 16, 'He took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.' So you see the Lord Jesus, in these Holy 'Writings' (for that is what 'Scripture' means), both invites and welcomes any 'little child.' Will you go, love, and ask Him to accept you? You remember that He died to save you."

And alone, upon her knees, our young friend went to the Saviour. She told Him how she wanted to be his child; to love and to obey Him here, and to live with Him hereafter. And she besought Him to take her, unworthy as she was, and to make her his own. And though the tears again fell fast, they were no longer tears of grief.

And as the golden rays of the warm, sinking sun had lighted up her tiny room, so the anxious little heart had also sunk to rest. For she knew, now, that precious Truth, "Ask and ye shall receive," and "Those that seek Me early, shall find Me."

MRS. MACALPINE'S HOMES.

THE homes in Manchester associated with the fragrant name of the late Mrs. Macalpine are three in number, and devoted to the work of preventing the tempted and neglected from entering upon a life of sin, rescuing the fallen, and affording shelter and care in maternity cases.

The report for the past year states that of the inmates received in the Rescue Home a large proportion are beyond the limit of age fixed by other Homes of a like character. "During the year, twenty-two women had been in this home for longer or shorter periods, and then gone away. Many of these have been tried over and over again in this and other Homes. In most cases the power of the drink-craving makes it next to impossible to keep them, or for them to stay; while in others, manifestly, mental and moral deficiency is the secret of their failure and our disappointment. Yet we trust that our earnest prayers and loving counsel will have good results, even with these."

Of the eleven girls who were in the Preventive Home at the close of last year, four are still inmates. During the year forty-six passed through the Maternity Home—twelve under the age of twenty, one barely sixteen. "It has been possible to take legal proceedings against fifteen of the fathers of the children. One case is still pending; one failed. In the others we were successful, and we have the satisfaction of knowing that the whole weight of the consequences of sin does not lie on one sinner while the other goes free."

The work of the training of nurses has been continued, at much cost of time and labour, by the medical officer, Dr. Brown. Three probationers have been under his instruction, and all have obtained the diploma of the London Obstetrical Society. On this point, the superintendent, Mrs. Coller, writes: "It would please us greatly to receive probationers who have consecrated themselves to mission work: and to them, we are sure, our special training would be eminently useful."

Communications regarding every branch of the work should be addressed to Mrs. Coller, at 100, Denmark-road, Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester.

POOR GENTLEWOMEN.

FOR nearly nine years Miss Smallwood, of Great Malvern, has been interesting herself in the sad condition of "reduced gentlewomen," many of whom, brought up well, highly educated, find themselves, after a toilsome life, in advancing years, friendless, ailing, and well-nigh penniless. Some cases given in the latest report of the Society for the Assistance of Ladies in Reduced Circumstances, are heartrending.

An ex-governess (aged 50) has broken down in health, suffers from the eyes, and has no income. Three sisters in advanced years have between them an income of £25. Another, who has been bedridden for over a year, and suffers greatly from neuralgia of the spine, is in sore need. One, who is over seventy, lives in a tiny room, suffering from bronchitis and rheumatism. An aged lady, just eighty-four, has no income whatever. Another, who suffers sadly from an internal complaint, has been ordered expensive medicines, has got outside pension now, has lost the use of right hand and arm. Four sisters in advanced years (two being confirmed invalids) have lost their all—save £15 a year—through no fault of their own. Another has herself and two children to support by marking handkerchiefs, which she does beautifully. Little girl very delicate.

But why enlarge? There are many such! What can be done to aid them? This is what this true friend is seeking to do.

Amongst other ways of helping, she encourages and aids her clients in making woollen goods and fancy and useful articles of various kinds. Quite a long catalogue can be furnished by Miss Smallwood of saleable articles which these ladies have made. Many of our readers might serve themselves and their friends by purchasing stock for their own sales of work, as well as for Christmas gifts.

Besides the assistance Miss Smallwood is endeavouring to render to these distressed ladies, she is making a special effort to raise before Christmas £500, to be invested for an annuity for one poor lady at a time. The idea might be multiplied indefinitely. Full details and report may be had of Miss Smallwood, The Lees, Great Malvern.

SPIRITUAL CONDITION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

I am anxious, by your courtesy, to be allowed to refer to mission work in South Africa—a colony which is just now receiving so much attention, and to which so many hundreds of our young men are going. From various quarters the matter has been pressed upon the attention of the directors of the Colonial Missionary Society, and at their request, I recently visited the leading towns in South Africa, as well as some of the mission stations. I should like to caution young men especially against going out without being provided with such letters of introduction as will ensure their being received into a circle of Christian friends. There are not many branches of the Y.M.C.A. in South Africa, probably not more than half a dozen. I only came across three—Cape Town, Durban, and Johannesburg. Young men cannot do better than make straight for these. The Association at Cape Town is one of the best in any part of the world. So many young Christians have their energies damped by the godlessness by which they are surrounded. Instead of swimming against the tide they, alas, surrender to it.

In Johannesburg, to which every week scores of Englishmen are going (for thirty-five new houses are weekly erected in that city), life is most terrible, whether for the native or the European; and though it is better to-day than a few years ago the condition of things is appalling. A traveller passing through a town in the southern part of Cape Colony told me that he had attended a united prayer meeting of the native churches, the chief burden of the prayers being that the young men going to Johannesburg might be saved from its sins. The American missionaries who are labouring so splendidly in Zululand feel the need so strongly that they have sent one of their ablest men to Johannesburg to look after their converts, so that they may not return to their homes with their religious life injured, if not destroyed. To save Johannesburg is, in a measure, to save South Africa. I do not know that that city is worse, comparatively, than others, but if British Christians would only realise their responsibilities how altered it would soon become.

As to work among the Europeans, the Wesleyan Methodists are doing a good work, but even with their energies, how much more remains to be done. Rev. Charles Phillips, of Graaff-Reinét, is about to resign his pastorate in order to go to Johannesburg that he may undertake a "Forward Movement," more especially among the natives, but the work will certainly extend to the Europeans also. If only half-a-dozen earnest Evangelical preachers, men full of the Holy Ghost, could be secured for Johannesburg, and sustained for the first few years of their work, a revolution for Christ would soon be wrought in that city. The Colonial Missionary Society has pledged itself, and through it Christian friends in England, to undertake this work. It is practically a work of faith, for the Master has opened the door; and though we have not yet the means, yet we believe that He who has given the opportunity of service will supply the means to embrace it.

One day when enjoying an "outspan" on the Karoo, a South African minister told me this beautiful and suggestive story. He said that while staying for a few days with a Dutch farmer he asked him one night, when the flocks had been safely gathered in, how many oxen he had. To his astonishment the farmer replied that he did not know. "Then," said my friend, "how could you tell if one or two were missing?" His answer was, "Not because the number would be less, but because of a face which I should miss." That seems to me God's way of counting.

IT IS THE FACE THAT HE MISSES.

Would that we also took this view—that standing under the very Cross of Christ we realised that these natives of Africa, two hundred millions of whom are unsaved, are to God living faces, men and women for whom Christ lived and died. If we did that, not only our prayers and our gifts, but our lives would be placed on his altar, and our answer would be, "Here am I, send me, send me!"

There are readers of The Christian to whom Africa is very dear, the more so perhaps because of their "kith and kin" who are there. Would you let me say that in this new and important departure which will more than tax our resources, and which will need consecrated men, as well as consecrated money, we shall be glad of their kind co-operation?

RECOLLECTIONS OF REGINALD RADCLIFFE.*

THE FAREWELL TO ABERDEEN.

The following is a retrospect by Mrs. Gibbon of Mr. Radcliffe's farewell prayer-meeting at Aberdeen:—

The glimpse God gave me into Mr. Radcliffe's character and spirit at the outset of my Christian life still holds one of the foremost places among my most treasured recollections. I believe to all eternity I will be thankful that he was sent to me, not only to lead me for the first time to Christ, but to give me a notion of what God can do for those who trust Him.

How one recalls his repeated utterances before God—of being "a worm," and never anything beyond—"worm Jacob in the hand of God, threshing the mountains," would escape him, while as a prince he had power with God and with man. By faith nature's impossibilities went skipping like lambs before him, and he seemed to delight in seeing difficulties tossed out of the way like balls in the hand of Him whose strength alone was recognised. Surely, if anyone understood "the law of the House," "that no flesh should glory in his presence," it was Mr. Radcliffe.

The special prayer-meeting with which Mr. Radcliffe closed his mission in Aberdeen will ever stand out in the memories of the few who remain of that greatly honoured company who responded to Mr. Radcliffe's desire. Instead of having any leave-taking of the inner circle of friends with whom he had stayed in the North of Scotland, he wished us to come to his lodgings in Union-street and have two hours of prayer together. How the company rise before me—the late Duchess of Gordon, from Huntly Lodge, Rev. H. M. Williamson, Duncan Matheson, Rev. James Smith, and many others.—all in touch with the Holy Spirit's work there so gloriously manifested.

The whole proceedings were uncommon; but Mr. Radcliffe's part I will only refer to. After considerable waiting on God, Mr. Radcliffe got a renewed hold of God in the arms of his faith; and cried almost with a moan, "let the power irresistible fall upon this meeting." Immediately that power fell, every one present seemed to be quite overpowered with the overshading presence of God, and were drawn into such perceptible nearness of fellowship with God.

Mr. Radcliffe followed with a prayer, the very opposite in character of anything many of us had ever heard from him before. Generally his utterances were sublimely simple and child-like; but this memorable prayer was full of the argument of faith! full of close, tender pleading with God, and then masterly capacity of faith to receive what he had desired. Few saints have reached such a high class in the school of prayer; and it does one good even to call to mind life in the Spirit of such fulness and practical power. Few evangelists I have ever had the privilege of knowing, combined such a spirit of love to all Christians; creating, one would almost say, a high temperature of love all around, along with such tact in preventing young converts leaning personally upon him. He was full of a sincerity of love to them, that seemed to point to and roll them entirely on God.

The joy of such times is quite indescribable; so deep, so pure, and so heavenly, the nearest foretaste that I have experienced in a community of what we shall know in perfection by and by.

The evangelisation of the whole of Scotland, the tracts sent from the new-born students, in the form of letters of personal testimony, and affectionate pleading to come to Christ, sent to all Scotch students, and Gospel tracts sent to every family in all the parishes in Scotland as far as possible was the work the young babes in Christ immediately addressed themselves to; while many of their number, anticipating the present movement for the evangelisation of the whole world, went forth to Africa, India, Madagascar, and wherever God led them. How many of the converts of these days are now the centres of missionary life, the day of God's revealing alone will manifest. What can hinder such floods of blessing, and yet more abundant?

MR. RADCLIFFE'S LAST BIBLE STUDY.

"Thy will be done in earth" (Matt. vi. 10).

"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He will thrust forth labourers into his harvest" (Matt. ix. 38).

"And now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy Word. And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together: and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the Word of God with boldness" (Acts iv. 29 and 31).

"And the hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord" (Acts xi. 21).

"So mightily grew the Word of God, and prevailed" (Acts xix. 20).

"Go ye therefore and teach all nations" (Matt. xxviii. 19, A.V.). "Make disciples or Christians of all nations" (Margin). "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations."—R.V.

Dean Alford's New Testament for English Readers says:—"Go...and make disciples. Demonstrably this was not understood as spoken to the Apostles only, but to all the brethren. Thus we read (Acts viii. 2 and 4), they were all scattered abroad... except the Apostles:—they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word."

MEDICAL MISSIONS.—Rev. J. Ossian Davies lectured on Wednesday afternoon, at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on "Medical Missions." The lecture was the second of a series of monthly lectures organised by the Congregational Union of England and Wales with a view to perpetuating the impressions left by the Centenary celebrations of the London Missionary Society. There was a good attendance. Mr. Davies began by endorsing Robert Moffat's dictum that a medical missionary was a missionary and a half, or rather a double missionary. The most successful missionary pioneer agency in existence was the medical mission. The medical evangelist was the ideal missionary, because for the double curse of sin and suffering he had a double cure. He held the magic key that seldom failed to open the most stubborn heathen portal. Of all the methods of missionary work—evangelistic, educational, literary, industrial, and medical—the medical mission was the most potent. Dealing with the modern medical missionary movement, Mr. Davies showed how sixty years ago there was not a medico-evangelist in the mission field, while to-day in India, China, Africa, and the South Seas qualified medical men were combining the offices of evangelist and medical men.

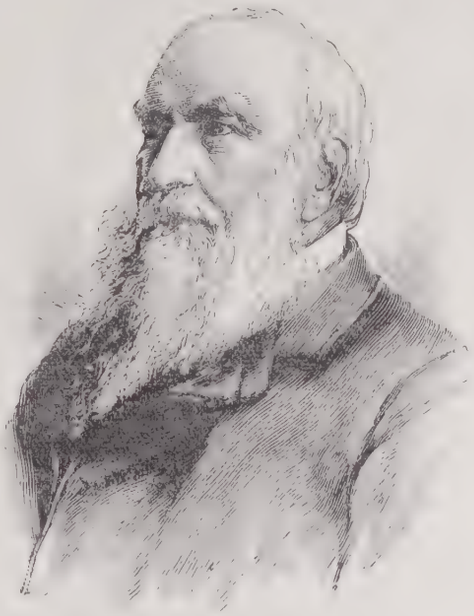
* From the forthcoming Biography of the late Mr. Radcliffe.

Rev. W. Anderson,

PIONEER MISSIONARY.

On the 15th of April, 1812, there was born at Galashiels a man whom it has pleased God and men to honour during a long life which has been chivalrously devoted to the propagation of the Gospel in a part of the world generally regarded with fear and horror by Europeans. For half a century he has occupied a place in the foreign mission field, no less than forty-one of these years being spent in "holding the fort" in the forlorn hope of the Church, the West Coast of Africa.

Rev. W. Anderson is an inspiring type of the old Scotch peasant. His father was a stocking weaver. In 1813 the family removed to Dalkeith, and afterwards to Galbridge, where, in 1823, Mr. Anderson, senior, died.



Thus, necessity compelled the future missionary to go into the factory, where he worked for some time in company with his little sister. Then he sought refuge on the hills, where he tended sheep. Afterwards he became a navvy; then several Christian friends, seeing the possibilities of such a bright young life, interested themselves on his behalf and secured him an appointment as a porter in a grocer's shop.

Pursuing a humble calling with diligence, the young man steadily prepared himself for the great work which he, even then, felt God was bringing to his hand. With great patience he educated himself. Books were his constant companion, and he had an insatiable desire to understand the profound mysteries of the Hebrew New Testament. During this period of his busy life he was actively engaged in Christian work, and occasionally found his way into the pulpit.

Mr. Anderson was quite a youth when the call came; he knew it was from God, and as such he accepted it. The opening came to him in an apparently trivial manner, but the young man knew that it was the answer to many prayers. One day a gentleman gave him an old newspaper containing an advertisement. A glance at this advertisement was, in God's hands, the pivot of his life. Young, unmarried men were required to go out to a newly-established mission in Jamaica as teachers. Mr. Anderson sent in an application, and was immediately accepted after undergoing a very rigid examination in the Shorter Catechism. On this point the young man was particularly strong, having learnt the little book word for word whilst tending sheep on his native hills, and now, in his eighty-fourth year, he is never so delighted as when giving to little children copies of this almost forgotten book. After his acceptance, Mr. Anderson underwent a brief educational course at Edinburgh, and, full of hope and zeal, he left Scotland, never to return except on flying visits.

In Jamaica Mr. Anderson did his duty as a true servant of God. His capacity for preaching was discovered. Sunday after Sunday he preached with great acceptance, and soon after his arrival he was appointed minister to the Rose Hill congregation, which worshipped six miles from the beautiful city of Kingston. Whilst pastor of Rose Hill he married Miss Louisa Peterswald, a native of Jamaica, one of the first fruits of the Carron Hall Mission, which did such an abundance of good and permanent work, and which has gone on ever since in an ever widening circle of influence. It is almost too late to say much about this noble lady. At the time of her marriage she was training for the mission field, ready to go anywhere or do anything to reclaim the heathen. She was, through her long and memorable life, thoroughly imbued with the missionary spirit. She was worthy to be the wife of such a husband, and God had joined them in the holiest of bonds for the accomplishment of the highest service.

During Mr. Anderson's ministry at Rose Hill—a singularly happy and useful one—a memorable page in the history of West African missions was written in ink which will never fade. The first band of missionaries left Jamaica for Old Calabar. The leader was Rev. Wm. Jamieson, of sainted memory. Just before leaving home a number of Christian workers held a prayer meeting, at which all present entered into a pledge to step into any breach that might be made in the ranks of the pioneers. The first breach was created with what seemed to them painful suddenness. Within six months news reached Jamaica of the death of Mr. Jamieson, and Mr. and Mrs. Anderson immediately offered to take his place. They were unanimously accepted, and they sailed together for the Dark Continent towards the end of 1848. With the exception of very brief visits home, they remained at Old Calabar until 1881, when God called Mrs. Anderson to higher service. She was an ideal missionary's wife, ministering to the sick in mind, and body, and soul. She was the recipient of many honours. So long ago as 1864 the gentlemen trading on the river invited her on board one of their boats to breakfast, and afterwards presented her with a service of plate as a mark of their esteem. Her grave is still kept green by natives and English alike, and many still have cause to remember her with the highest form of gratitude.

Notwithstanding this heavy blow, Mr. Anderson remained at his post. Pressure was brought upon him to induce him to take a long rest, but he refused to leave "his people." To this day he is always spoken of in Old Calabar as "Our father," and he rejoices in the title. He had invitations to other churches, but nothing could induce him to leave the West Coast, "Old Calabar is my life; God gave it to me," he says, and this intense devotion to his people is one of the secrets of his almost phenomenal success. His influence over the natives is almost supreme. In 1877 he was invited to a large church at Kingston, Jamaica, but, much as he loved Jamaica, he had learned to love Old Calabar more, and he declined to leave it whilst God was giving him such unmistakable evidence of his desire that he should remain.

Through the long busy years, Mr. Anderson not only preached and taught, but spent much of his strength in translating the Bible into the native tongue. It was a Herculean task, but he had the joy of seeing a printing-press turning out portions of the Gospels in the vernacular.

This is not the place to write the history of the Old Calabar mission, but this much may be said—the history of the mission is worthy to rank with the inspiring work which Dr. Paton and his colleagues have done for the New Hebrides. The outward results may be summed up in a few words. Man sacrifice has been abolished, likewise the murder of twins, the ordeal of the poison bean, Sabbath markets and sports; the natives have been clothed, the Sabbath is being observed; the Bible and sixty or seventy other precious books have been printed at the mission station in the native tongue; two schools have been established in the large towns and twenty others in the outlying stations; there are twelve native teachers engaged working amongst their brethren; there are five regular, well-organised congregations, with twenty other places in which regular services are held. Truly, as Mr. Anderson, often says, "the dawn has broken; daylight is nigh."

Failing health, which threatened total blindness, compelled Mr. Anderson to leave Old Calabar in April, 1889. The farewell was a pathetic one. When he stepped on board the vessel, all the people cried, "Our father has gone; our father has gone"; and felt that a friend and brother had departed.

After spending two winters on the Canary Islands, Mr. Anderson once more paid a visit to the old country beyond the Tweed, telling his thrilling story of the Old Calabar Mission, preaching hither and thither on behalf of his black brothers. And now he has gone back to Old Calabar; he wants to die and be buried in the presence of those he brought, like first fruits, to God.

Mr. Anderson possesses a distinction which is believed to be unique. He has seen the jubilee year of his service as a foreign missionary, and he does not think that he has finished his work yet. When asked how he had maintained excellent health in such a treacherous climate, Mr. Anderson remarked, in his quaint and humorous manner, "I attribute it to four T's, temper, temperance, temperature, and tea," excellent advice from a veteran missionary, not only to young missionaries going to the coast, but also to the large numbers who go there in pursuit of commerce.

A PRESBYTERIAN CONVENTION.

ADDRESSES BY REV. ANDREW MURRAY.

The three days' convention on the spiritual life, held last week in connection with the London Presbyteries, began with a great assemblage in Regent-square Church on Wednesday evening. Not since the very palmiest days of John McNeill has the historic building been so crowded from the aisles to the topmost gallery. The choir seats were filled up with members of the Presbyteries, not confined to London; while the pulpit was tenanted by the pastor of the church (Rev. A. Connell), the Moderator of the Synod (Rev. R. Leitch, of Newcastle), and Rev. Andrew Murray. Mr. Connell's opening prayer gave a hallowed tone to the occasion, and was in strict keeping with all that followed.

A short and fervid address from Rev. R. Leitch followed the devotional exercises. From Isa. i. 19, "If ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land," he showed that all God's blessings are conditional. Pardon is dependent on penitence and confession. Spiritual strength cannot be had without humble waiting on God. Many are anxious for victory over self and sin, but they are not prepared to pay the price and fulfil the conditions. The church of to-day is to a large extent spiritually impotent, because its members refuse to obey God and to yield up the entire being to Him. God has made all the needful provision; if we accept it we shall learn the secret of peace and rest of soul, of victory in life, and of power in service.

THE SPIRIT AND THE FLESH.

Rev. Andrew Murray's address was founded on Paul's word to the Galatians: "Are ye so foolish? Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect in the flesh?" (iii. 3.) When we speak of the quickening or the deepening of the spiritual life we always think of something that is feeble, wrong, or sickly. As we look around on the Church we see so many indications of feebleness and failure, of sin and shortcoming, that we are compelled to ask how it is that the Church of Christ is living in such a low state. Has not God given Christ, his Almighty Son, to be the Keeper and the Strength of every believer? Has He not given the Holy Spirit to every believer, to make Christ an ever present reality, and to communicate to the Church all that we have in Christ? The cause of our weakness as Christians is this—God has called the Church to live in the power of the Holy Spirit, but we have been living, in great part, in the power of human nature; in human energy and self-effort apart from the Spirit of God.

Let us learn, first of all, from this passage that the beginning of the true Christian life is receiving the Holy Spirit. In this epistle Paul not only shows that justification is by faith, but that the justified man cannot live except by the Holy Spirit. It is to be feared that there are many Christians who hardly know that when they believed they received the Holy Spirit. If these Galatians who received the Holy Spirit in power were led astray by the terrible danger of seeking to be perfected in the flesh, how much more danger do they run who scarcely know, except as a matter of theory, that they have had the Holy Spirit given to them? If we are in earnest about this, let us be sure that the Holy Spirit must be far more honoured as the one whom God has given to be the Guide and Strength of our lives.

Look next at the great danger of forgetting that we are to live in the Spirit, and of being content to live in the flesh. A train that is being shunted in the dark, if the points are faulty, may run on to the wrong line of rails for some time before it is discovered. So it may be with the Christian life. A man may live a pure and consistent life outwardly by virtue of education and other influences; but we need to remember that we cannot live a truly godly life, a day or an hour, unless we be guided by the Holy Spirit. These Galatians, after they had received the Spirit, fell back under the Judaising teachers who persuaded them that they must be circumcised. They began again to seek their religion in external observances and to glory in the flesh. The human will and human effort may be very active in religion, even after conversion and after the receiving of the Holy Ghost; we may begin in our own strength to try and serve God, and yet all the time it is not the work of the Spirit, but of our own flesh. It is an unutterably solemn thought that a man may, without noticing it, be shunted from the line of the Holy Ghost on to the line of the flesh. A man may be a preacher or a Christian worker; he may be most diligent in his ministry, and may make great sacrifices; yet it is evident that he is not a spiritual man. If you take the current preaching throughout the Church of Christ in England, and Scotland, and Holland, in Europe and America, you are compelled to ask why there is so little power with the proclamation of the Word, and so little result for eternity. There is also the further question as to why there is so little power in building up believers in holiness and consecration. The answer must come: it is the absence of the power of the Holy Ghost. The flesh and human energy have taken the place of the energy of the Holy Spirit.

Notice, thirdly, what were the proofs and evidences that the Galatian church was trying to serve God in the power of the flesh? Count up the expressions that Paul uses to indicate their want of true spiritual life, and they amount to twelve or fourteen—hatred, envy, jealousy, bitterness, strife, and other like expressions. Is not this a matter of unspeakable solemnity? There is a complaint everywhere in the Church of Christ to-day of the want of a high standard of integrity and godliness, even among those who are its professing members. If we consider not only the commercial morality or immorality to be found amongst us, but go into our homes and look at the life of love to which God has called his children, what do we see? How much there is of unlovingness, of temper, of bitterness! Do we not also find among the members of our churches much strife, envy, jealousy, sensitiveness, and pride? Where are the marks of the presence of the Spirit of the Lamb of God? Are they not sadly wanting?

People regard these things as if they were the natural result of our feebleness; that they cannot be helped; and that there is no prospect of ever having things changed. And there is no such prospect, till the Church of Christ begins to see that every sin in the believer comes from the flesh; till we see that somehow or other we must get God's Spirit back to his Church in power. The Church began at Pentecost, in the Spirit; but, alas! how the Church of the next century went aside in the flesh, and strove in the succeeding century to be perfected in the flesh. Do not let us think because the blessed Reformation restored the great doctrine of Justification by Faith, that everything was got then. It is my trust that if God is going to have mercy on his Church in these last ages it will be through the truth about the Holy Spirit being sought after with the whole heart; and that ministers and people will be down before God in deep abasement because we have grieved his Holy Spirit, and because we have not sought to be filled with the Spirit.

My last point is as to the way of restoration. If the train has got shunted off, there is nothing for it but to come back to the point at which it was led away. There is no other way for us as individuals or as churches but to come back to God and yield ourselves humbly and penitently to the Holy Spirit. God's message to any soul conscious of feebleness and failure is, "You have no conception of what life would be in the power of the Holy Spirit." I bring you this message just as truly as the message that the Everlasting God came to the world, and wrought his wonderful works in Jesus Christ, and that on Calvary He died and wrought out human redemption by his precious blood. The Spirit can come into your heart with divine power, to sanctify you and enable you to do God's blessed will, filling you with joy and with strength.

In his closing sentences, Mr. Murray called in most earnest tones for a sincere and heartfelt humbling of the spirit before God, that He might reveal to all their need and their shortcoming, that He might give willingness of heart to receive the fulness of the Spirit, and an appropriating faith to lay hold on the gift. In his closing prayer these desires and longings were expressed in language of great intensity, and one could but feel that God, through his servant and by his Spirit, was preparing the Conference at its very first meeting for a season of reviving from his presence.

THURSDAY MORNING.

There was a large attendance of ministers and Christian workers in Regent-square Church. The Moderator opened the proceedings; and after praise and prayer Mr. Murray delivered a searching address on preaching and its results. Basing his discourse on 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5, he said: The Apostle speaks of two styles of preaching, and of two styles of religious life as a result of that preaching. There is preaching "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power": and there is preaching in "the wisdom of this world." As a result of the former, the faith of the hearers is rooted in God's power; and as a result of the latter, it rests in the wisdom of man. Christ taught the Apostle two things—what he had to preach, and how to preach it. He had to preach the Gospel of the cross; but not with wisdom of speech, lest the Cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

Many have taken as their motto the words, "I determined not to know anything save Jesus Christ and Him crucified," without giving due regard to the other part of the Apostle's statement: "I came not with excellency of speech, or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God." Paul adds: "I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling"—the frame of a man who feels himself to be absolutely nothing, and obliged to wait upon God's Holy Spirit at all times. After he had been preaching the cross for twenty years, being, as he said, not a whit behind the chiefest of the Apostles, Paul writes to the Ephesians, "Pray for me that I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak."

We ask for the cause of the feebleness of our ministerial efforts, and inquire what is wanting in our lives. Are the promises of God's Holy Word, that we shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, within reach; and can they be realised in us so that we walk among our people as divinely guided? Are we content to live as we have too often lived, in feebleness and failure? That our preaching can be in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, is the one condition upon which God has put us into the ministry of the Gospel. It is the one promise we have a right to claim of God, and it is the one great need of the Church in her conflict with the forces of sin and evil.

It is often said that a tree cannot grow on any other root but that from which it first sprang. The origin of the Church takes us back to the resurrection of Christ and Pentecost. If, therefore, we would know what the Church ought always to be, we must look at Pentecost, and see the great principles upon which God deals with his ministers and with his people. God gave us Pentecost as a pledge and token of what He is willing to do at all times. I have seen in South Africa rivers that flow clearly and swiftly, but as you follow them into the desert they disappear altogether. Not so the stream of the Holy Spirit; it flows in its almighty power through the Church, and it is because of our unbelief that its power is so little realised. John saw flowing from under the throne of God and the Lamb a river clear as crystal—the water of life.

What did Pentecost mean for the first disciples? They had been with Christ for three years; He had instructed and loved them, but failed to get access into the depth of their hearts. He was a Christ outside them. He taught them humility, but at the Last Supper they disputed who should be the greatest. He taught them to confess Him before men, but when He was delivered up to crucifixion, they all forsook Him and fled. He taught them to love one another, but this commandment was also disregarded. So He promised that on his ascension He would send the Holy Spirit, the very life of God and the very life of Himself, who would in his heavenly power abide in them for ever. When the Lord thus took possession of his disciples, several things ensued in consequence. Their pride was changed into humility, their weakness into boldness, their selfishness into a wonderful love. Why? Because the Living Christ, with his humility, boldness, and love, had entered their hearts. The wonderful change which was wrought in the disciples at Pentecost can also be effected to-day in ourselves.

Then, because they had Christ in their personal life, there was power for witness and service. They were filled with love and purity and joy; the upper world, the heavenly, took possession of them, and conquered the flesh. In the Holy Spirit they testified, and suffered, and conquered, and the little band increased, and from among them there went forth to Samaria, Cæsarea, and Antioch, men and women full of the Holy Ghost.

In the life of true disciples we see two stages—a time of preparation and a time of fulfilment. In the former, as in the Mosaic economy, God allows man to come to an end of his own endeavours; and afterwards He steps in, and does his own mighty work. The case of Peter is one in point. Christ allowed him to fall in order that his own impotence might be shown; after the Apostle wept bitterly, he was met again by Jesus, and led to Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit made a new man of him. There are cases in which the full power of God comes upon a man at conversion, but this is not the rule; many a man lives his entire Christian life in an un-Pentecostal state, knowing nothing of the rest and joy which fulness of the Spirit brings. It is possible for ministers to preach beautiful sermons, and hold the interest of large audiences by their clear arguments and sound logic, but yet to preach without demonstration of the Spirit and of power. As Dr. Saphir said, Christ crucified must be preached in a crucified spirit—in weakness and fear, and much trembling, that the power of God may be manifested in us.

If these things are true, what do we need? First, conviction and confession. Just as the sinner is convicted for conversion, so the believer who has been living partly in the flesh must be convicted for sanctification. We need to be brought under conviction regarding all that is carnal in our nature, of self-confidence, of neglect of waiting upon the Holy Spirit of God. Secondly, we require faith in the possibility of the blessings of Pentecost. God is able to work a mighty change. Let us link ourselves to his omnipotence, prove his power in conquering sin, and leading us forth to service. Thirdly, we must surrender ourselves to the Holy Spirit for power and guidance in all our work.

In conclusion, Mr. Murray prayed that Holy Ghost power and blessing might be vouchsafed to those whom he had been addressing.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The large church was again densely crowded in the afternoon. Mr. Murray began his address by referring to the old-time story, "Eyes and no eyes," of two boys who go for a walk, and on their return are asked by their father what they have seen? One has seen nothing, while the other has seen all sorts of interesting things. So in the spiritual life—some see nothing of the blessed privileges of the saint, revealed in the Word, others, having learned how to use their eyes, find their lives full of brightness and power. In illustration of this, Mr. Murray recalled the story of Elisha's servant at Dothan, who, his eyes being opened, saw the protecting hosts of God around. So, he believed, much of the failure and feebleness of the Christian life arises from the fact that our eyes have not been opened to see what there is in God for us. Following this line of thought he said:—Turn now to Eph. i. 17-20, where the Apostle describes his prayer for the saints. What does he pray for? Three things specially: First, that they might know the hope of his calling; second, what are the riches of his inheritance in the saints? third, what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe. Now, these three things are just what we need; and the Holy Ghost must reveal them to every believer if he is to walk as God would have him walk. Many possibly may not see much difference between these three things; but there is a very great difference. Suppose a man receives an important appointment from the Queen—perhaps to conduct a war or some intricate negociations. What does he want? First, to know his calling, his duty; what he is sent for; second, what is his emolument; third, what resources he has to draw upon. So we believers want to know what we are called to do; what is the blessed reward; and what power there is to do it.

We ask, then, what is the calling of the Christian? It is described as a "holy" calling and as a "heavenly" calling. We are called to be holy, not merely to avoid gross sin, but to be holy. Unless the Holy Ghost teach us, we cannot know fully what it means. "Be ye holy, for I am holy." Are we longing, crying, I must be holy? Then we must be ready to give up everything to be holy according to our calling.

But, secondly, we want to know the blessedness of this calling, That ye may know "what are the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." Not the inheritance of God in the saints, but our inheritance. The riches of it. What riches? His wonderful love. The inheritance of the child is his father's love. By the blood of Jesus I get into the holiest of all, the heart of the love of God. And with that love there is joy, joy unspeakable and full of glory. Moreover, there is all that God's promise contains of love, peace, and hope. We are the children of the Great King, "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ." "All things are ours, for we are Christ's, and Christ is God's."

Thirdly, the great question, when I speak about holiness, is this: Can it be? Is there power? I had a letter yesterday from a dear lady in Holland who, when I was there, asked: "Mr. Murray, do you really believe that all you say about Christian life and joy is in the Bible?" "How can you ask that? Do you think I would preach it if I did not believe it was in the Bible?" Now so it is with many, simply because they take their ideas from man instead of from God. So with regard to power: people ask, can we have power? Listen to Paul, praying: That ye may know "what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand." Think of that, the very power working in you that lifted Christ from the grave to the throne of glory. That same Almighty power is working in you, believer. You may say, "Well, I see very little of it." I know; but why? Because it is "to us-ward who believe," and you do not believe. You do not believe that power is available for you; and because you do not believe, you do not experience. Remember, you are not dependent on my word, or on any man's word, but on the God Almighty, who will reveal to you his power in Christ, if you will trust Him unreservedly. Shall we not come to Him in simple, child-like confidence, as to a Father who loves to forgive? Let us yield ourselves to God, submitting to the word and teaching of the Holy Ghost; then surely shall our eyes be opened, and we shall behold his power and glory as never before.

THURSDAY EVENING MEETING.

The evening gathering was held in Exeter Hall, which was crowded. Rev. Dr. MacEwan, who presided, briefly introduced the proceedings. Rev. S. R. Macphail, of Liverpool, spoke next, voicing, as he said, the deep longing of thousands who have read Mr. Murray's books, and those of other teachers in spiritual life, and have realised there is an experience they have not yet reached. They confess, they are conscious of failure—how can they enter into, and enjoy that fuller life of which others speak?

Rev. Andrew Murray began by pouring out his soul in prayer, and then said:—The words on which I want to speak to you on you will find in Acts xv. 9. "Purifying their hearts by faith." At previous meetings we have been speaking about the Holy Spirit, and what it is that hinders his indwelling and in-working in the believer, and the possibility of having the Holy Spirit as our guide and strength every step of the way, as implied in the words "Walk in the Spirit." We have spoken of the blessedness of full surrender; but many surrender, and yet fail to enjoy his abiding presence; and the question is, what is wrong? My text may suggest the answer. God gave the Holy Ghost to these Gentiles, as He had done on the day of Pentecost, when he had cleansed (as the Word is in the original) their hearts by faith. You know the Lord Jesus said, "Blessed are the clean in heart, for they shall see God." The abiding indwelling of the Holy Spirit is for the clean in heart. I want then to speak this evening on the Divine Preparation for the Divine Blessing.

That Divine preparation is the Divine cleansing of the heart by faith.

Now first of all the cleansing. I have quoted from the Sermon on the Mount; and the Apostle Paul speaks to Timothy, both first and second epistles, of "a clean heart"; so also the Apostle Peter (1, i. 22). Now what does this mean? First, cleansing from past guilt. The believer who would be filled with the Holy Spirit must be cleansed. Nothing can be more terrible than the wounded conscience of the believer over sin. We look back on years of failure in temper and tongue; and we mourn before God; how sadly it has been clouded by unfaithfulness. Shall we not seek the cleansing of all the guilt of our past Christian life? Thus we shall be able to look up to God as forgiven and accepted in Christ.

Again, seek cleansing from the love of sin. Many do not seek this; do not believe that the will may be renewed. They speak of the stubborn, rebellious will; but the child of God ought not to speak in that way. I find in Rom. vii. a man who says, "I delight in the law of God": "To will is present with me: but how to perform that which is good I find not." The will is right, but it is not till we come to Rom. viii. there is the full enjoyment of it. You must have your will right with God, else He cannot help you.

Once more, seek cleansing from the power of sin. The unconverted man is under the power of sin—he is its slave—but the child of God has no right to be; he is freed from the power of sin. It has no legitimate rule over the believer. The child of God may give sin power by yielding to it; but he need not do so. God has freed his child from the legitimate power of sin: but through ignorance, slothfulness, or yielding to the flesh, he may give sin power; and, alas, sin often exerts tremendous power over the child of God. Shall we not claim cleansing in this respect? Others speak of cleansing from the presence of sin, stating that the last vestige of sin is taken away. I do not find that in the Word of God. I find that the tendency to sin remains to the very end. But I do find that the blood cleanses from sin every day and every moment.

Now, look at the Divine power by which this cleansing work is done, "God...bare them witness ...cleansing their hearts by faith." They believed in Jesus, and He came as the Cleanser. Notice the close connection between Christ as the cleanser and as the giver of the Holy Ghost. This is seen again and again in Scripture. For example, John the Baptist points to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," and speaks directly of Him as "the Baptizer with the Holy Ghost." The Lord Jesus is the Cleanser. It is true we must "cleanse ourselves," and that work must be done earnestly; but just as truly it is of God. We cleanse ourselves by coming to Christ to purge our sin. This work is Divine work, for Christ is God. Let us take time to look up in his face and claim his cleansing. The work is hidden, like all Divine work. Here many get into trouble; they want to experience, to feel, to see something to rest upon. We must rest on the Word of God, believing that He is able to cleanse and deliver; that He is the faithful, unchangeable keeper of our souls. But, again, this work can take place in one moment. So it was at Cæsarea, when the Gentiles were in one moment converted, cleansed, and filled with the Holy Ghost.

Now, all this is to take place by faith. Faith implies a sense of need, an intense longing, a real desire. Faith also involves simple surrender; all must be given up that He may do as He will. If there be any failure here, speak it out honestly before God. Moreover, faith means acceptance; reach out the arm of faith, and receive Christ as the Cleanser now.

The great question before the Church of Christ is this—Why are we so feeble and the work of God so barren of result? The answer is that individual believers are not filled with the Spirit. When their hearts are cleansed by faith, the Holy Spirit will fill them, and there will be power for work, and joy in service, and rest in daily life.

[We defer till next week, some notes of the third day's meetings.]

BESSBROOK HOMES FOR SANDWICH MEN.—The second annual meeting of these Homes was held on Friday afternoon at 39, Queen-square, Bloomsbury. The report stated that early in the present year it became apparent that the accommodation at No. 39, Queen-square, fell far short of the demand, and so a second Home was opened at 167, High Holborn. In the summer, when the need for further premises had again arisen, a cottage was acquired at the back of the Queen-square house, and there are now 105 beds under these three roofs. It should be mentioned that although only 4d. a night had been, and still is, charged at Queen-street, no difficulty was experienced in inducing sandwich men to pay 6d for the somewhat better accommodation provided at High Holborn. In many ways those who manage the Homes endeavour to improve the position of the men.

GOOD-BYE TO THE AFRICAN CHIEFS.

Were it not for the previous experience of the three African chiefs during their stay among us, they must have been wonderfully impressed by the spectacle that greeted them at Queen's Hall on Thursday evening. It was not only a brilliant assemblage socially, that crowded every part of the fine hall, but it might be properly described as representing the flower of the mission-loving public. As Mr. Albert Spicer M.P., the chairman, well observed, it was a unique occasion as bearing on the mission enterprise, and as an object lesson it was a fitting close to the public engagements of the centenary year of the L.M.S.

After a missionary hymn, Rev. J. P. Gledstone led in prayer. Mr. Spicer gave a very appropriate and much-applauded address. It was well, perhaps, that the chiefs could not follow his words very closely, or they might have been in danger of getting puffed up at his laudatory description. Having given a running account of the negotiations between the chiefs and the British authorities which had ended so successfully, the chairman heartily congratulated our dusky friends on the outcome of their visit. He added some words of grave counsel as to the added responsibility that now rests upon them. In the name of the great audience and of the British Christian public he wished them a safe journey home, and a happy welcome from their own people.

It was a little bit aside from the primary object of the gathering, but Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson was well justified in giving the very latest news from Madagascar to hand that day. The intelligence, he said, was dated nine days after the entry of the French troops into the capital, and was satisfactory all round under the circumstances. The English missionaries and a deputation of native pastors had waited on the French general, and had received from him the assurance that there would be full liberty of conscience and worship, and no religious work would be interfered with. This news, said Mr. Thompson, had removed a great load of anxiety from the minds and shoulders of the directors of the L.M.S. The great part of the speaker's subsequent remarks was directed mainly to the tribes under the three chiefs, and to the importance of their using well the opportunity now within their grasp if they would not be swept away before the rising tide of European immigration. Mr. Thompson read a letter he had just received from the chiefs, appealing for the founding of an educational establishment, like Lovedale, in their territory. The audience having cordially cheered this request, the L.M.S. secretary replied shrewdly that cheers would not defray the cost of such an institution, and that if it were to be established the Christians of this country would have to contribute liberally towards it.

A good deal of interest was excited by the speech of Rev. W. C. Willoughby, who has acted as interpreter of the three chiefs, and who is Khama's missionary. His words were fraught with wide interest, though he went somewhat perilously near to transgression in a prophetical reference to the colonial developments of the present Cabinet. He said the drink question was not placed in the forefront of the mission of the chiefs, as they felt certain that would be settled satisfactorily. The great point which concerned them was the continuance of Imperial rule, as opposed to the control of the chartered company. That has been conceded, and so the greatest object of the visit has been achieved. Mr. Willoughby spoke in warm terms of the kindness shown to the chiefs all over the land in the places which they had visited, and said that the present meeting, great and imposing though it was, did not exceed by a whit those held in other populous centres.

A hearty ovation greeted Lady Henry Somerset, as she rose to express the sympathy of British temperance women with the three brothers in black in their mission. Her eloquent words were quite epigrammatic in their force and terseness. No greater radiance, she said, has come to crown our Victorian age, than the humble homage given to our Sovereign by these three honest hearts. There must be stalwart mothers in that South African land, or such sons would never have seen the light. She hoped they would ever understand that the uplift of woman is the exultation of man. God bless darkest Africa, soon to be white with peace, and beautiful with brotherhood.

After some sympathetic words from Mr. Fox Bourne, as representing the Aborigines Protection Society, a very lively and amusing speech came from Sir Wilfrid Lawson. There was method in his merriment, however, for he very conclusively showed how the action of the Government, of the Colonial Secretary, and the words of Her Majesty as to the prohibition of the drink traffic among South African natives, were powerful arguments for similar action as to the home trade in intoxicants.

Last of all came the speeches from the three chiefs, Sebele, Bathoen, and Khama, clearly interpreted by Rev. E. Lloyd. Their words were marked at once by dignity, simplicity, and evident gratitude. They all spoke thankfully of the kindness they had experienced since they landed on our shores, of the happy results of their mission, and especially of their joy at having seen and heard the Queen in her own home. They seemed much delighted with the presents she had given each of them—a Bechuana New Testament, a picture of herself, and an Indian shawl for their women folk. They repeated in earnest terms the request, already made in writing, that an educational institution should be established for the benefit of these young people. All the chieftains' speeches were warmly cheered, and as a good send-off to them, the great company sang, "God be with you till we meet again."

The chiefs sailed from Southampton on Saturday for their own land. They must carry back with them many wonderful impressions, and we trust the outcome may be a great advance in the civilising and Christianising of the South African tribes.

THE TEXT-CARD MISSION.

Will the kind helpers who responded to the last message from the Text-card Mission, now join in a note of praise for the Lord's distinct blessing given? We have aimed at sending out a million cards this year, and already good reports are coming back.

From Maritzburg, South Africa, a correspondent writes:—"The English and Zulu are in immediate use, and will soon be spread. Four women in my class have come over the line to Jesus. They have been learning one of your texts each week for some time, and prize them very much. The men in my husband's class also learn one a week, though several cannot read."

Multiply this message by a thousand, and you will see what cause we have for praise. We want much prayer also, and shall be glad of financial help, for there is yet "much land to be possessed"—Korean, Ibo, Jargon, Sechuana (Khama's language), Sesuto, Quicha, Secvana, Mwamba, Negro English, Mosquito Indian, Kabyle, Haussa, and others are before us. Some may be ready this year; we hope the rest during 1896.

In several of these tongues very little of the Bible is yet printed, and in others none; but by the blessed intercommunication which God has given between all lands, texts are often sent on ahead, and by these fragments a hunger is created for the full Word of Life. Emma Grimké.

PRESENTATION TO DR. BARNARDO.

THE Council Chamber of Exeter Hall was crowded on Tuesday afternoon, when an illuminated address was presented to Dr. Barnardo, with over £3000 in money, as a memento of public esteem in connection with his thirty years of rescue work among children. The Marquis of Lorne had promised to preside and present the testimonial, but was prevented by attendance at the funeral of Sir Henry Ponsonby, the late secretary to Her Majesty the Queen. Lord Kinnaird took the place of the Marquis. After prayer by Rev. Evan Hopkins, the Secretary of the Presentation Committee, Mr. Howard Williams, stated that letters had been received from a large number of friends, expressing the warmest sympathy with the work that Dr. Barnardo has accomplished. Among those who thus wrote were the Archbishop of Canterbury and Sir Charles Tupper; the latter making very favourable reference to the emigration work to Canada.

Mr. Howard Williams read the following address, which has been beautifully illuminated, with views of the various Homes surrounding it, and the whole enclosed in a massive gold frame:—

"We desire to congratulate you most warmly on attaining your jubilee, and to express our heartfelt appreciation of the splendid services you have rendered to the cause of humanity, and especially to the orphan and destitute children of our land. It is impossible to estimate the far reaching usefulness of the work God has enabled you to accomplish.

"We rejoice that nearly 30,000 waif children have been rescued from inevitable misery and degradation, and trained in your Homes for honourable and useful lives; and of these over 8000 have been emigrated to Canada, where, under your fostering care and amid happier surroundings, they are growing up honest, loyal citizens of our great Empire.

"We thankfully recognise the courage, the indomitable energy, and untiring devotion that have always characterised your work, stimulating others to follow your example, and awakening a larger and broader sympathy in dealing with the friendless and unprotected little ones of our towns, cities, and villages. We ask you to accept the accompanying purse as an expression of our love and affectionate regard for your noble character and life-work, and we trust that your valuable life may be spared for many years to come, to carry on the work associated with your name.

"Presented and signed on behalf of the subscribers by "KINNAIRD."

"Nov. 25, 1895."

In making the presentation Lord KINNAIRD expressed much thankfulness to God for the recovery of Dr. Barnardo from his recent illness, and also for the presence of Mrs. Barnardo in recovered health. His lordship summarised in brief form some parts of the truly wonderful work which the guest of the day had been enabled to do since he started as a medical student in East London, nearly thirty years ago. The chairman stated that some 1100 persons had contributed to the testimonial; amid the applause of the company he formally presented the address and a purse containing a cheque for £3417 10s. 4d.

Dr. BARNARDO, in replying to the presentation, gave utterance to feelings of sincere gratitude to those friends who had contributed, and said that his appreciation of the testimonial was far beyond any monetary value, large though that was. He went on to give an intensely interesting sketch of the condition of things among the poor of London when he entered on his work at the age of twenty-one. He told of the wonderful changes for the better that had taken place since then—partly through changes in the law, and partly through the efforts of Christian workers. He rejoiced that he had been honoured to take a part in such work. One great improvement was the abolition of the barrack system and the adoption of the cottage or boarding-out system. The work had attracted around it men of all shades of social position and political and religious opinion. The Doctor again expressed his thankfulness to the friends present, and said that the gathering of to-day would ever be a spur to him in his future work.

Very interesting speeches were also made by Mr. Wm. Fowler, the treasurer of the Homes, and Mr. J. E. Mathieson, both of whom spoke in terms of deep appreciation of the work that had been done through these past thirty years.

News having been telegraphed from Canada that one of Dr. Barnardo's boy emigrants, who recently died there from ill-treatment, was mentally weak and unfit for emigration, Dr. Barnardo writes to The Times emphatically denying the allegation, and advancing clear proof of his statement. The telegram had stated that the Canadian superintendent of the work admitted that a superficial medical examination of the boys was made before their leaving the Homes in England. In reply to a cable message from Dr. Barnardo, the superintendent, Mr. Owen, has denied making such a statement.

GOSPEL ACTIVITY AT STRATFORD.

MR. E. FOX BUTLIN, general secretary of the Stratford Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A., writes:—

"We paid off all the remaining debt on these splendid buildings last year, and they are now held by trustees for the preaching of the Gospel and a home for the Y.M.C.A., a wonderful boon to this neighbourhood.

"We are now making a great effort to gather together 1000 men on Saturday evenings, a time of great temptation to the men in this neighbourhood, for whom we feel more must be done. This means much increase of work and expense, yet we dare not stop.

"Our congregations on Sunday evenings still range from 1500 to 2000 people, and in the afternoon about 800. Our Young Men's Bible-class on Sunday afternoons is still attended by 100 young fellows, all between sixteen and thirty years of age. The Junior Bible-class for boys between twelve and sixteen has an attendance of seventy. We are pressing on, but find it hard work sometimes with thirty-three public meetings each week to keep going."

A ZULU EVANGELIST.

Mr. J. J. MEEK writes rejoicing in tokens of progress, and referring to a communion service in which 200 Zulus took part. He tells of the marriage of Wesley Ndaba, his first Zulu convert, and after recounting his conversion (which Mr. Meek was wont to relate during his recent visit to this country), he tells how eager this bright young Zulu is to give himself wholly to the work of evangelisation, for which he seems peculiarly fitted. He writes:—

"The loving Saviour has filled Wesley with a wonderful gift. He often preaches in our meeting-room, and it is a very great treat to hear the words as they flow from his lips, as he receives the life-giving message from God. What I am now aiming at is to send him to a distant post, but that I cannot do myself, having only just enough to cover our wants at home; £24 per annum will keep this faithful servant at a constant war against the dreadful power of darkness amongst his own people. Who will take him as their own—for the Lord of hosts? I have several others who go and preach the Word around us, and, up to date, the friends and readers of THE CHRISTIAN have kept Wesley Ndaba well to the front, but having had to pay for a few really needed thing for him and his wife's wedding there is but little left, but many are the Lord's servants to whom I bring this question, hoping that it may not be in vain. Dear friends, we have but only one life to serve the Lord with on earth, and that life is to-day, to-morrow comes and we pass; such a door is not opened every day in this deep valley of sin."

The friend who sends this letter offers £2 per annum, in the hope that others will add annual subscriptions to the amount required to support this devoted Zulu evangelist. Communication should be sent to Major Liebenrood, Prospect Park, Reading.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—By the mail of October 18, which reached us to-day, we have received details of the recent sad deaths from cholera at Wen-chau, of which you took notice in your issue of last week. It now appears that Mr. and Mrs. Menzies had brought their baby into Wen-chau for medical treatment. While there it was seized with cholera, and died on September 30. The terrible disease quickly took hold upon the others, and in spite of all that medical skill and careful nursing could do, Mr. Menzies passed away on October 7, and Mr. and Mrs. Woodman on the 9th. In addition to these, we are sorry to say that three girls in attendance at the mission school, and two of the native Christians, were carried off by cholera.

In the letters received by the same mail our friends express their anxiety concerning the workers in the far North-western provinces, owing to the Mohammedan rebellion. I would ask for prayer that in the midst of these present great trials the presence of God may be specially with his children in China, and that they may be delivered out of the hands of the enemy,—Yours, very sincerely, WALTER B. SLOAN, Secretary.

HACKNEY-ROAD MISSION.

THE twenty-sixth annual tea and public meeting were recently held in the Mission Hall, Union-crescent, Union-street. The report of the past year, read by the hon. superintendent, Mr. John Girling, told of the in and outdoor services, Sunday school, Band of Hope, tract distribution, sick visitation, day in the country, and Christmas gatherings and gifts to needy poor and children. The chairman, Mr. John Pearce, speaking from long acquaintance with the Mission and its leader, said they were fully worthy of the practical aid of all Christians. He earnestly hoped that as the superintendent was unable, on account of his age—sixty-three years—to get a similar position to that he before held, some fifty or sixty benevolent Christians would subscribe for him annually not less than £1 each, so as to form a fund for his maintenance in the mission work. To further such a result, he would willingly give £5 annually for that object.

Mr. George Nokes told of many years' friendship for and knowledge of Mr. Girling's work in the East End and elsewhere. Mr. John Archer, of Ilford Tabernacle, and Mr. Thomas Yarrow, of Lower Edmonton, gave effective Christian and telling addresses.

"HE BEING DEAD YET SPEAKETH."—A beautiful instance of this was brought under our notice this week. A Christian gentleman in the North of England in sending a cheque for £200 towards the new work which the Colonial Missionary Society has undertaken in South Africa, said that his interest in the Colonies was kindled in him by his first pastor, the Rev. J. L. Poore. As Mr. Poore died nearly thirty years ago in Australia, it shows how early and deep the impression must have been.

JEWISH ALMANACK.—Mr. Henry Barnett has brought out his almanack again this year. It gives Jews information about their religion, the sabbaths, feasts, and fasts, and the lessons that are read in the synagogues. There is a text of Scripture for every day, and the person of Christ is described in the words of the Old Testament, with a view to bringing Jewish readers to a knowledge of sin and the Saviour. Workers will find this a useful booklet. Terms for quantities may be had from Mr. Barnett, 94, Malmesbury-road, Bow, E.

MR. FEGAN'S HOMES.—In a recent communication, Mr. Fegan says he looks back to his stay in Canada with feelings of deep thankfulness, not only on account of the good work he was enabled to put in, which we are sure will bear fruit for many years, but because of the encouragement he got in seeing the lasting influence the training received here has had upon the character and lives of the old boys. While he was away he saw hundreds of old boys, wrote two letters to every boy on the books, and left behind him practically a new home, fitted in every respect for the work. The annual sale of useful and fancy articles in aid of the waifs and strays sheltered in the homes will be held in the large schoolroom of the Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E., on Tuesday and Wednesday, December 3 and 4, 12 to 7 p.m. each day.

Letters to the Editor.

"CHRISTIAN UNITY."

Dear Sir,—In quoting single texts there is sometimes a danger of their being misinterpreted. Is not the whole of John xvii. intended to show forth the fact of the unity of the Church in the Father through the Son who ever was, and now is, "the chief corner stone"?

There are indeed many branches of the Church of Christ on earth, and if all who are truly his among them be "walking in the light," they will certainly show forth to the world that they are one in Him.

Without wishing to appear in any way dogmatic, one really is unable to trace in the Divine Word any intention to form an outwardly visible Church, for which purpose the Lord could have given definite instructions had it been his mind. But He did not, therefore on that point let us be content with Col. i. 18.

[We have received a large number of letters on this subject, with which we hope to deal next week.—Ed.]

CARING FOR THE WIDOWS.

Dear Sir,—Referring to Lord Radstock's admirable suggestion on "Caring for the Widows," it may be helpful to others to hear of something already attempted. Having a strong objection to any Christian Church allowing its aged members to end their days in the workhouse, three years ago, in connection with the Westbourne Grove Chapel, I took a twelve-roomed house at a rental of £50 a year. This house we now use as a "Widows' Home." We admit to it two classes of inmates. (1) Widows and single women over sixty years of age. These live rent free, and receive such other aid as the church or their relatives may be able to afford. (2) Widows and single women under sixty years of age. These are admitted when vacant rooms are available, and pay such rent as may be commensurate with their means.

Our sources of revenue are (1) so much of our communion collections as may not be required for the relief of other distressed church members; (2) the rent of paying inmates; (3) benevolent contributions; and (4) an annual sale of work. We have a matron in charge, who occupies one room rent free, with coals and lights provided. I beg most warmly to commend the scheme. Amongst other advantages, the congregating of our most needy fellow-members, and the increased measure of sympathy evoked from the whole church, are worthy of notice.

We have not at present had any occasion to make provision for aged men, but we want to do more amongst the poor out-of-doors.—Yours very faithfully,

John Tuckwell, Pastor.

CHRISTIAN GIVING.

Dear Sir,—Your issue of November 14, contains a brief editorial in reference to the subject of Christian liberality, in which it is laid down as almost an axiom that a Christian should devote at least a tenth of his income to religious work. The statement is, I am aware, no new one, but its reappearance induces me to offer a few words on the topic.

I venture to suggest that there is no authority in Scripture for such a demand. I am not now saying what particular individuals ought, or ought not to do, but am only dealing with the question, whether Scripture requires such a proportion. There are some who could, and ought probably to give a fifth or a half, but that is nothing to the point.

In the New Testament the principle of systematic giving is clearly laid down, but no proportion is fixed. The rule is "as God hath prospered him," and the amount is left to individual conscience.

But, then, it is said, the people of God under the old dispensation had to give a tenth, and surely under the new we ought not to do less. Granted, if the ability exist, but not otherwise. There is one fact in connection with Israel's tithe which is habitually overlooked, viz.:—That this tenth which God claimed, covered rent and taxes, and what would now be called "Church subscription." God was the land lord: the Israelite had no rent to pay beside this tithe. Now contrast this with the position of most Christians at the present time. In their case, rent, taxes and water will swallow up quite a sixth of the income and perhaps more; and it should be remembered that part of the taxation is made up of a heavy poor rate, by which the householder is compelled to contribute so much for the support of the poor. Is it fair, therefore, to insist upon it as a Scriptural duty, that every Christian is bound to otherwise give away a tenth of his income? I am certain that in numberless cases such a course could not be pursued without serious injury to the persons doing it, or to their families.

The main point, I take it, is that the giving should be systematic, and the proportion fixed by the giver, according to the words, "Every man as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly or of necessity."

I quite agree that if all Christians gave systematically there would be no deficiency of funds for Christian work, and this would be the case without a tenth being fixed as the invariable rule.—Yours sincerely,

James L. Stanley.

THE INTERPRETATION OF PROPHECY.

Dear Sir,—Having observed a growing interest in the prophecies concerning the Lord's Second Coming, and that as the interest grows the opinions of the various schools of interpretation are becoming more pronounced, and as I have been a student of God's Word for nearly forty years, it occurred to me that a few hints thrown out would perhaps tend to lessen any friction that may arise from the presentation of such different and apparently conflicting views. Each and every phase of God's Truth revealed to his Church is seized upon by Satan as an occasion for rending the Church, if possible; and this last and very important truth of the coming in glory of our Lord Jesus Christ for his Church, will certainly prove to be a notable battlefield. We are not ignorant of Satan's devices. So let us be sober and watch, i.e., be on our guard.

Now, with reference to these various schools of interpretation—the Historical and the Futurist, with their subdivisions—let them come together in a spirit of prayer, looking to the Lord, for whose speedy return they all equally long; and they will probably find that there is a way of reconciling those apparently contradictory views of the one great subject. For my part, I have long since reconciled them—I believe both to be true*—"The mystery of iniquity doth already work," said the Holy Ghost by the Apostle Paul in his days—And we know it has been working since the days of Nimrod, producing all the idolatry and the various systems of false religion that are now to be found in the world, all equally antagonistic to God and his Truth, therefore called "the lawlessness," and also equally "the lie."

When God brought his people Israel into Canaan, and planted his truth there, Satan's lie came in and tried to destroy it. When the Gospel of God's Christ was preached and proclaimed in the world, Satan's lie entered into Christendom and there opposed God's Truth; and so it has always been—Mohammedanism, Paganism, and false Christianity, all are from the same source, and all are working to the same end.

I would liken this Satanic structure to a pyramid, the foundation laid in the land of Shinar (cf. Zech. v. 5-11)—that is, Babylon—and it has been building up all these years, all its sides showing similar features: and as the Christian studies the prophetical Scriptures he thinks he sees the features and the working of Antichrist in a king of Asshur, and then again, in Daniel's prophecy, he sees them in a prince of the Roman Empire; and then again, in Dan. viii. 9, in a prince in one of the divisions of the Grecian kingdom. Then, apparently, a king of the north (in Dan. xi.) appears as the Antichrist, and as a Jew.

Again, in studying history, the Christian sees a resemblance to Antichrist in one of the successors of Alexander; then something similar may be seen in the Roman Empire; then comes Popery, and a resemblance to Antichrist is seen in the whole system of Popery. Then other brethren see in Mohammedanism the Antichrist. Those who see in an empire, or in a religious system, many or most of the prominent features ascribed to Anti-Christ in Scripture, reject a personal Antichrist, and, from their point of view, prophecies that may be still future are looked upon as past. They are in the position of a man standing and viewing one side of a pyramid in course of erection, unfinished. One sees the Roman side, another the Grecian, another the Turkish or Mohammedan, etc. But I would say, "Brother, the pyramid has to be finished, the top stone, the headstone has to be put on, and that stone will represent all the features of the pyramid. All these sides are leading up to, and will actually give shape to the headstone." The Personal Antichrist, I believe, will rule the whole of the kingdoms of the world, as the top stone crowns the whole pyramid. As each side of the pyramid presents features corresponding to a side of the headstone, so Greekism, Romanism, Mohammedanism, and Paganism have now so many features resembling "the Anti-Christ" of Scripture that one and another have been mistaken for that very Antichrist.

I like much the letter signed "H. G. St. Dalmas," in the number of The Christian dated June 6, 1895. I believe with him, that "in regard to some things, both may be right in what they affirm, and wrong in what they deny," and that "we reach the truth not by subtraction but by addition"; also "that some things may not be intelligible until they are fulfilled."—Yours in Christ,

J. W. Wilson, Major-General.

Penguin, Tasmania.

[* That these prophecies have a fulfilment through the ages, and that these will culminate in a crisis at the close, seems evident; and thus there is an historical and a future fulfilment. But various historical and futurist theories or schemes of fulfilment cannot be reconciled so far as they definitely contradict each other. The pity is that their advocates will not see that the self-same principles of good and evil are and must be continually in operation, on larger and smaller scales, until the consummation.—Ed.]

OXFORD NOTES.

[From our Own Correspondent.]

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has been spending a few days in Oxford, and has addressed several meetings.

Another visitor, whose presence has been most warmly welcomed, is Mr. T. E. Alvarez, vice-principal of Fourah Bay College, Sierra Leone, and now home on furlough. Mr. Alvarez was the life and soul of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union when an undergraduate, and his words have therefore a double power with Oxford men, among whom he has very many friends. He has addressed the meetings of the Gleaners' Union, and also of the University Missionary Union, and his earnest appeals for additional workers cannot prove in vain.

Dean Farrar was University preacher last Sunday, and gave a very faithful and practical sermon on Pride and its various forms, illustrating it from sacred and secular history. Canon Jacob, of Portsea (Bishop-elect of Newcastle), and Rev. A. F. W. Ingram, of the Oxford House, Bethnal Green, preached in the same pulpit during the day.

A mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, in Walton-street, has been held during the last week, Rev. J. Mee being missioner. The results thus far have been very encouraging, and give tokens of increasing blessing.

The anniversary of the Church of England Temperance Society was held on Sunday and Monday, when the cause of temperance was ably advocated from pulpits and platforms.

The work of the Baptist Missionary Society was brought before the Commercial-road Baptist Church last week, Dr. Watson, of China, being the principal speaker.

A MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION.

On Wednesday evening, November 20, there was held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle a great missionary demonstration of young people. The vast building was thronged with a concourse of 5000 or more, a large proportion being young people. The gathering was organised by the Young Christians' Association of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Sunday-school; and was representative in its character, invitations having been issued to nearly 600 centres of young people, including Sunday-schools, Y.M.C.A.'s, Y.W.C.A.'s, and Christian Endeavour Societies.

The chair was taken by Alderman Evan Spicer, supported by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.

Addresses, full of earnestness and eloquence, were delivered by Rev. F. B. Meyer and Rev. Herbert Anderson, of the Baptist Missionary Society. Then Dr. Harry Guinness delivered a lecture entitled "My Experiences on the Congo." The limelight views illustrating the lecture were most effective; and the lecturer could scarcely restrain the enthusiasm of his audience as the exquisite pictures were thrown on the sheet.

The collection amounted to £37, and the proceeds of the demonstration are intended to benefit the Baptist Missionary Society, the Congo Balolo Mission, the Missionary Bureau, the newly-formed Young Christians' Missionary Union, and possibly some other societies.

Looking back to this happy and memorable evening, we would say to other bodies of young Christians, "Can you not do something on similar lines in your own Church to help Foreign Missions?"

THE Y.M.C.A.

The first annual meeting of the Missionary Union of the Islington and Highbury Association was held on the 19th inst. Dr. G. T. Keele presided, and Rev. Alfred Bax delivered an address on Christ's great commission to his disciples. Six members of this Association are now in the mission field, the Union members writing monthly to them. Several meetings have been held during the year.

The call of the Central International Committee to observe the week, Nov. 10 to 17 inclusive, as the Y.M.C.A. Universal Week of Prayer, met with a very general response in this country, and, as usual, a very large number of special sermons to young men were preached by clergymen and ministers, at the invitation of local Associations. Many small branches arranged for twelve and fifteen sermons, and a number of the larger ones were able to secure over fifty.

The seventh annual meeting of the Kingswood Y.M.C.A. was held on Tuesday week. The report stated: Our membership roll gives us 140 names. The Sunday morning prayer-meeting still continues its steady course. Sunday evening evangelistic services, held during the winter months in the lecture-room, were again largely attended, chiefly by young people. All through the summer months large crowds listened to the old Gospel story of the Cross proclaimed at open-air meetings

The Coldstream Y.M.C.A. have a meeting every Sabbath evening, in the Mission Hall, which is especially meant for the non-church goers. Last Sabbath the meeting was conducted by Mr. James Watson, president, the preacher being Rev. P. Mearns. There was a large attendance, the Hall being quite filled. Many people in humbler circumstances highly value this meeting; and but for it, might be ready to say, "No one careth for our souls." The members hold meetings on Sabbath evenings, on both sides of the Tweed at farm-places.

A reception was lately held in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Winnipeg, Man., to say farewell to Lee Ying, a Chinaman, who is going home to Canton for a year. He has been in Canada for eighteen years. Through a class which is held every Sunday afternoon at the Association, he has been led into the light, and is now a member of Knox Church. In this class, which is attended by about forty, each Chinaman has a teacher who gives instruction in reading (especially the Bible), and there are five who have joined the church. This work is slow, but God is blessing His own word as it is taught in this way.

The united mission at Sunderland, conducted by Rev. John McNeill, terminated on Sunday last in a very successful manner. Both in the afternoon and evening some hundreds of people were unable to gain admission to the Victoria Hall, which was crowded in every part. The arrangements in connection with the mission have been very satisfactorily conducted by a united committee. The Y.M.C.A. took the initiative in the matter of of inviting Mr. McNeill, and it has been decided to devote the balance left over from the mission—after sending Mr. McNeill a suitable thank-offering—to the building fund of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A.

Upwards of a hundred representatives of Y.M.C.A.'s in the South Midland district met at Reading, on Wednesday, 20th inst., for the autumn conference of the district union. The associations at Aldershot, Aylesbury, Charlbury, Eversley, Harmondsworth, Wycombe, Newbury, Oxford, Reading, Windsor, and other centres were represented, and under the presidency of Mr. Martin Jno. Sutton, an excellent programme of business was got through at the morning session. Mr. Sutton entertained the delegates at luncheon, at which he was represented by his brother, Mr. Arthur Sutton, who, together with Messrs. E. Beaumont, J. N. Badger, and F. Hunt, was elected to represent the district on the National Council. The Soldiers' Christian Associations of the district were admitted as auxiliaries of the Union, representatives of these associations being present in the persons of Mr. Arthur H. Wheeler (general secretary), and friends from Windsor and Oxford. By request of its committee the association at Devizes was transferred to the western district. An excellent paper upon the subject of recreation was presented on behalf of Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.A., M.P., president of the Oxford association, who was unavoidably absent. This paper was an invaluable contribution, and provoked an interesting discussion. The reports presented by the associations showed considerable progress in many instances, though, in a few, difficulties had been encountered, leading to the weakening of the work. At the evening session, Mr. W. H. Mills, who was present as representing the National Council, opened a discussion upon the subject, "Essentials to success in Y.M.C.A. work." The delegates present were impressed with the great blessing that attended the gatherings.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Miss Helson has been appointed co-secretary with Miss Barclay at Wood Green.

A new branch for seniors and juniors has been started in connection with St. Michael's, Hatcham.

Rev. E. A. Stuart is to give an address at the Percy Institute, King's Cross, on the evening of December 4.

The Lyndhurst-road branch, Hampstead, is being closed, and the members transferred to the Rosslyn-hill centre, of which Mrs. Bickersteth Cook is hon. secretary.

The Sidcup branch has just celebrated its thirteenth anniversary. Mr. A. E. Schurr presided, and addresses were given by Miss Morley, Mrs. Tate, and others.

The St. John's Wood Institute continues to be very successful under Miss Welch and her band of workers, but a leader is much needed for the Sunday afternoon Bible class.

At West Ham, Miss Hussey has been appointed secretary. The Stratford branch, of which Miss St. Leger was secretary, has been closed and the members drafted to West Ham.

Mrs. W. H. Stone and Miss C. Evans are now hon. secretaries of the St. James's branch, Hatcham, meeting at 62, Lewisham High-road. A recent mission was attended with much blessing.

At the annual meeting of the Newton Abbot branch, Mrs. H. G. C. Bishop presided over a good attendance. Miss Wills, secretary, reported that the membership had increased from sixty-two to eighty-seven. Miss Ardill gave an address.

The Viscountess Portman is announced to open a united sale of work at the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, on December 3, at 2.30. The sale will be in aid of the Y.W.C.A. Central Institute, the C.M.S., and the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

The hon. secretary for the Scottish Division, Miss Murray Gartshore, has been obliged to resign the position she has so long held, acting on doctor's orders. Much regret is felt at this unavoidable decision, but it is hoped that Miss Murray Gartshore will still remain on the council.

A new branch, connected with Holy Trinity, Beckenham, but meeting in Penge, has been commenced. Miss Crowden is hon. secretary. A most successful opening meeting was held on Tuesday, when over thirty joined, in addition to twenty-five who had given in their names previously.

Rooms have been taken at 43, Earl's Court-road, for the new branch at Kensington, which is to take the place of the branch carried on until recently by the Hon. Mrs. Hobart Hampden. Gifts of furniture, books, and a piano or harmonium are needed. Miss Barlowe, of 48, Edwardes-square, has accepted the post of hon. secretary.

The anniversary meetings of the Derby Y.W.C.A. were held at St. James's Hall, Derby. At the afternoon meeting Mrs. Ogle occupied the chair. Reports were given of three branches grouped with the Derby centre. Outings had been arranged for the summer time, and now for the winter months indoor meetings and social gatherings were organised. Christ Church branch had 66 members; Trinity, 50; St. Peter's, 59; and the central branch, 260; total, 435; or, including Duffield, about 500. Thirty-six boarders had made use of the home during the year. At the evening meeting Mr. E. S. Johnson, J.P., presided, and addresses were delivered by Mrs. Arthur Blackhall, Rev. S Paynter, and others.

The annual meeting of the Hackney and Clapton centre was held at the rooms of the institute, Seymour House, Portland-place, when Mr. T. H. Rippin, J.P., presided. There was a good attendance of members and friends. Mr. Baines presented the eleventh annual report, which showed general progress. The chairman remarked that if the Christian Church were alive to its duties there would be a similar home in every large thoroughfare. In his position as chairman of a Board of Guardians, and as a magistrate, he often found cases in which women might have been saved from ruin by a little Christian influence when they started in life. Addresses, warmly commending the work, were given by Revs. W. G. Morcom, J. Germyn, E. Medley, and others.

WALTHAMSTOW.—The annual meeting of the Young People's Mission was held on Wednesday week at the Y.M.C.A., High-street, Mr. Wm. Shurmur presiding. The report showed a total attendance of 19,699, and a net increase on the previous year of 5899. Encouraging statements were made as to the spiritual results, some eighteen known cases of quiet, but intelligent, "coming to Jesus" being stated to have taken place during the past three months. The hon. sec. is Mr. Frederick Wimp, 1, Alfred-villas, Westbury-road, Walthamstow.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

In one C.E. society the members daily write a note of personal appeal for decision for Christ, and hand it to some one that they may meet in place of a tract.

The tenth annual convention of the New Hampshire Christian Endeavour Union held lately in the South Church, Concord, proved one of the most enthusiastic and profitable gatherings of its kind.

When a camp meeting was held lately in a mission station in India, each of the twelve societies in the district formed a chorus and went to assist in the meeting, some of them going a distance of twenty-five miles. They gave excellent reports of evangelistic work that they had been carrying on at their own homes.

The recent annual meeting of the South Dakota C.E. Union in Redfield, U.S.A., was the largest it has ever held. Contrasted with its first meeting held there seven years ago the growth of the movement has been remarkable. The sessions were characterised by a spirit of earnestness deeper than mere enthusiasm.

At the tenth annual convention of the Massachusetts Union the total registration of delegates was 1309, of whom over 400 came from outside the county. Temperance and missionary and junior Endeavour work all came in for special consideration, and the proceedings culminated in a magnificent audience to hear the address of the beloved president, Dr. F. E. Clark.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. D. Murray, of the Free Church, Tarbat, Easter Ross, has attained his pastoral jubilee.

Rev. R. Simpson, of Turriff, is to receive another call to the pastorate of the Free High Church, Edinburgh.

The annual meeting of the Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, was held last week, when an interesting report of the year's work was submitted.

Principal Miller, of Madras, has again been nominated Moderator of the F.C. Assembly for next year. Dr. A. Scott, of Edinburgh, has received the Established Assembly nomination.

The meetings last week of the Aberdeen Convention for the deepening of the spiritual life were largely attended. The presence and speech of Rev. Andrew Murray drew many people from town and country.

The annual missionary meeting of the Glasgow Free Church Presbytery took place on the 18th in St. Andrew's Hall. Lord Overtoun (who presided), Rev. Dr. Glover (Bristol), Rev. Mr. Lawes, Miss Paxton, and others spoke, and Mr. D. S. Salmond conducted a choir of 250 voices. The chairman alluded to the recent visit of Khama and his brother chiefs, and expressed the satisfaction with which the country had received the news of the successful result of their interviews with Mr. Chamberlain.

New offices for the Free Church of Scotland Temperance Society are to be erected in Bank-street, Edinburgh. There are 764 abstaining ministers in the Free Church, 551 adult societies, with a membership of 55,922, and 657 Bands of Hope, with a membership of 77,376. Two-thirds of the students in Aberdeen Divinity Hall, 90 per cent. in the New College, Edinburgh, and all the students in the Glasgow Divinity Hall, with the exception of three, were abstainers last session.

SEAMEN IN CHINESE PORTS.—Rev. A. Gurney Goldsmith, the Missions to Seamen chaplain at Hong Kong, who is at present in this country, is very anxious that some further accommodation should be made for the welfare and comfort of the many British seamen frequenting Chinese ports. With this object in view, he is endeavouring, during his stay in England, to raise £2600, in order to erect a large sailors' coffee house at Hong Kong, where seamen can assemble for mutual intercourse and harmless recreation, and so be free from the many evil and pernicious influences ashore.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessing on a special mission for young people at the Baptist Chapel, Lee, S.E., by Mr. Monro Collings, from December 2 to 13.—For a mission by Mr. Richard Weaver in the Christian Mission Hall, Pontymoile, from December 1.—For blessing on services to be held by Mr. John Bennett, of Evangelisation Society, at Hazelbury Plucknett, December 1 to 6.—For Rev. John McNeill's mission at Cardiff, December 1 to 12. For a mission by Mr. W. Thomson, jun., in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, January 5 to 26, that there may be a great in-gathering of souls.—For a mission by Mr. Gerald Coultas, in King-street Hall, Southsea, commencing November 3.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Mother's Friend. Volume viii. of the new and enlarged series contains several stories, and wholesome readings for the home. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton).

Early Days is as bright as ever, being written and illustrated specially for the young, whom it is calculated to instruct as well as entertain. (1s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist Book-room.)

The National Temperance Mirror. Vol. xv. of this illustrated magazine for the home circle is full of good things. Many of the poems and other contents will be specially acceptable to those who conduct Bands of Hope and other temperance societies. (2s. and 3s. National Temperance Publication Depôt.)

THE BOOKS OF MOSES.

Exodus: An Autobiography of Moses. By J. M. Denniston, M.A. The esteemed author of this work did not long survive its publication. But he was permitted to see a hearty reception accorded to his book, and to engage in a revision of its pages so as to make it a still more complete answer to the assumptions and speculations of those who would "reconstruct" the history of Israel. As we showed when the work was originally issued, the Pentateuch is more or less fully surveyed in this very thoughtful volume, whose author combined true spiritual insight with adequate scholarship and sound judgment. This second edition has some valuable notes and more substantial additions. In these days, when almost all theologians are giving some attention to critical theories, it is hoped that those who see the Scripturality and cogency of the old view will not allow this plea for the Mosaic origin of the Pentateuch to be altogether overlooked. For the Higher Criticism to satisfy its votaries is no evidence of the truth of its theories; it must be arraigned at the bar of common sense in order that its claims may be searched out and calmly estimated. Such works as this should convince "advanced" writers that Moses and his books are not yet analysed out of existence and erased from the page of authentic and credible literature. (3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

Life with a Purpose. By Rev. J. Reid Howatt. (1s. Nisbet.) A series of plain, pointed, earnest talks with young men and women on such themes as Conviction, Discipline, Enthusiasm, and the like.

A Lost Army: A Tale of the Russians in Central Asia. By Fred Whishaw. These are exciting pages, illustrating events in the reign of Peter the Great. The tragic character of some of the incidents marks the book as more suitable for elders than juveniles. (Nelson.)

A Treatise upon the Life of Faith. By William Romaine, M.A. (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence has edited with notes and references a centenary edition of this excellent work. A sketch of the life of Romaine is prefixed. The treatise is a lucid statement of approved teaching on the subject of holiness. We trust it will have many readers.

Pilgrim Steps is the title of an admirable little book, giving "daily readings for the help of all pilgrims from this world to that which is to come," selected from Bunyan's immortal allegory, with suitable texts of Scripture to point the readings of the day. To travel a few steps each day with the pilgrims, and learn afresh the lessons of the way, is at once pleasant and profitable (2s. Jarrold & Sons).

The Ethics of Gambling. By W. Douglas Mackenzie. (1s. Sunday School Union.) Mr. Gladstone has complimented the author on the aim of this brochure, and we think the substance of it equally praiseworthy. It is a thoughtful and conclusive argument on a subject of very pressing social importance. We wish all young people who are tempted to begin gambling or betting could be induced to read it.

Mrs. Emma E. Hornibrook has given, in her new work, The Spanish Maiden (2s. 6d. Partridge), a story of a foundling in Seville, who is adopted by the wife of a rich Englishman, is by-and-by taken to Brazil, is won by the love of God to a clearer and purer faith, and becomes a blessing to others. It is a pleasing tale, with fresh glimpses of life on the pampas, while at the same time setting forth the darkness of Romanism and the light of the Gospel.

The Boy Skipper. By W. C. Metcalfe. (3s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.) This "true tale of the sea" well deserved to be handed on to posterity in permanent form. British seamen have ever been noted for their courage and fidelity to duty; but such a story of heroic behaviour in the face of great difficulties is rarely met with. Every real boy who reads this true tale, told in splendid fashion, will be thrilled with admiration, and spurred on to a like achievement.

The Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling, are now the publishers of Bishop Ryle's tracts. Under the title of Seed Corn they issue three sixpenny packets, each containing 150 handbill tracts. The style is at once simple, direct, and impressive. The same publishers issue four sixpenny packets of four-page tracts by the late Brownlow North, printed in large type. Tract distributors will find these issues very suitable for general circulation among the careless, or the worldly professor.

Bab; or, Tit for Tat. By Harriette E. Burch. (2s. Religious Tract Society.) The little parcel of mischief bearing the name of Bab, for a long time escapes punishment for her illdeed, which falls unjustly upon her sister Effie. But conscience at last prevails: Bab confesses her wrong; and the young reader will profit as much by Effie's nobility of character as by Bab's meekness, and will learn that, after all, naughtiness and happiness are not the same thing.

Hanserd Knollys: "A Minister and Witness of Jesus Christ," 1598-1691. By James Culross, M.A., D.D. (2s. Alexander & Shepheard.) This is an addition to the series of historical and biographical "Baptist Manuals," edited by Professor Gould. It tells the deeply interesting story of a man who suffered nobly through devotion to truth and conscientious conviction. Though brief, this is a choice biography, helping us to realise the religious history of the seventeenth century.

Living Sacrifices. By Rev. W. W. Birtt (1s. J. Nisbet & Co.) Rev. J. Ossian Davies writes a very warm introduction to the ten brief "talks with young men and maidens" that leads the reader to expect much. But he will not be disappointed. The amount of sound, wholesome, and necessary counsel that is packed into small compass is remarkable. The style is almost epigrammatic in its terseness, and there is not a dull page in the little book. We cannot too strongly commend it.

The Earl's Granddaughter. By Brenda. (6s. Shaw & Co.).—This authoress has so often aspired to and secured public favour that she is always sure of an interested hearing. It is a trifle daring, perhaps, in these days of many books and little leisure, to launch a story of forty-four chapters and nearly ten times that number of pages; and "here and there one" among her readers may cavil at the minuteness of detail with which some chapters are lengthened out. But, criticism apart, those who persevere will find their reward in profit and pleasure.

After Death the Judgment, by F. W. Pitt, is a thoughtful little book. It is impossible, however, in sixty small pages to answer effectively the many questions that have gathered round the subject of future punishment, and in twenty more to deal with passages of Scripture which have been crucial all down the ages, and as to the precise signification of which the most orthodox Christians are by no means agreed. Nevertheless, the author contends with vigour and reverently for the doctrine of eternal punishment, as it has been commonly understood. (6d. W. G. Wheeler.)

The Seven Churches in Asia. By Alexander Mackennal, D.D. (Elliot Stock.) Dr. Mackennal, in these vigorous studies, regards the seven churches addressed in the Apocalypse as "types of the religious life of to-day." There is nothing strained about the similes that he draws; whilst his treatment and application of the special characteristics of each Church are of the most solemn and practical kind. The author dedicates the volume to the Congregational churches in England; but there is no body of professed Christians that will not profit greatly by a perusal of it.

Spiral Stairs; or, the Heavenward Course of the Church Seasons. By Rev. J. H. Townsend, D.D., vicar of Broadwater Down, Tunbridge Wells. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This volume contains Sunday meditations from Advent to Whitsun-day, with the addition of Christmas, Circumcision, Epiphany, Good Friday, and Ascension Day. Dr. Handley Moule, who writes an introduction, well says: "From chapter to chapter the inmost theme is the glory of Christ, that grand Alpha and Omega of the Gospel." The studies are thirty-four in number, and they deserve many readers.

Pamphlets.—The addresses given at the Bridge of Allan Convention last summer have been published by Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, in a shilling pamphlet (cloth 2s.). It contains a wealth of practical and experimental teaching on the spiritual life, by well instructed expositors. Rev. Andrew Murray has furnished a preface, and there are six portraits. An admirable and clever sketch of the career of Rev. John McNeill, written by D. Lamont, is published by Messrs. T. and G. Allan, 18, Blackett-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne (1d.). The portrait given of the evangelist is not a very successful one. The Case Against Butcher's Meat, by C. W. Forward (6, Dorset-street, E.C. 1s.), is a powerful plea for the vegetable form of diet.

Music.—The Great Teacher, and Sing; Words in each case by F. R. Havergal. (4s. each.) I am So Happy! and Happy Day! being Nos. 1 and 2 of the "Sunshine" Series, words by composer. (4d. each). All these are sweet Gospel songs, which will enliven and cheer many a family gathering during the long evenings of the approaching winter. The Disobedient Duckling, and The Butterfly and the Bee. Nos. 1 and 2 of "Songs for the Children." The words of these two sweet songs are culled from "Recitations for Little People," by Mrs. L. Shorey. As recitations they have been much appreciated by the little folks, and convey important lessons in a striking manner. All the above have been set to music by Mr. Alleyne-Harris, and are published by Messrs. Weekes & Co.

Two interesting contributions to "the World's Wonders Series," issued by Messrs. Partridge & Co., are Celebrated Mechanics and their Achievements, by F. M. Holmes; and Naturalists and their Investigations, by George Day. Mr. Holmes tells about lighthouses, the steam-hammer, the wonders of water power and other fields of mechanical enterprise. Mr. Day relates the achievements of four famous naturalists—Linnæus, Thomas Edward, Cuvier, and Charles Kingsley. In the same department of literature, and containing some of the same material as in the book above referred to, is Mr. F. M. Holmes' Great Works of Great Men (2s. 6d. Partridge & Co). It is a very attractive account, in popular language, of the triumphs of modern engineering.

Lights in the Darkness. By Emily S. Holt. (3s. 6d. John F. Shaw & Co.) As Christmas comes round once a year many think of Emily Holt and sigh "for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still." To a large class of readers no book was more eagerly looked for than her annual story of England in the olden time, the time which was both bad and good, because of the persecution by the old Romish enemy of the loyal and faithful sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. Emily Holt has joined the throng of those whose lives she so well described; but we have another posthumous relic of her pen in the book before us. It contains four graphic sketches from days of deepest interest. They relate to Alfred the Great, Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, Lawrence Saunders, and Katherine Willoughby Duchess of Suffolk. These brief narratives have not, of course, the sustained and complex interest of her longer stories, but they are waters from the same well, drawn by the same hand, and given with the same goodwill—drink of a quality much needed in these dog-days of Rome's (returning) summer.

THE REUNION OF CHRISTENDOM, by Rev. J. T. Wrenford, vicar of St. Paul's, Newport, is a timely and wholesome word. (1d. Partridge.)

Two useful almanacs are: JOHN PLOUGHMAN'S, a wall sheet, and SPURGEON'S ILLUSTRATED, a handy booklet (1d. each. Passmore & Alabaster).

The "Christian Advocate" of Belfast has issued a sheet almanack (1d.), with daily texts and photos of Methodist leaders in Ireland. (Henderson & Co., Belfast.)

THE BIBLE-SEARCHING ALMANAC has come out for the thirteenth year. It is a very interesting and useful publication. (1d. each. Edward F. Gedge, Redhill, Surrey.)

THE LIFE OF FAITH ALMANACK, 1896 (6d. Marshall Bros.), gives, besides admirably-classified daily texts and Bible notes, useful information as to coming conventions.

THE MINISTER'S POCKET DIARY, 1896.—This clerical vade mecum of useful information, with its admirable arrangement for engagements, visitation notes, texts and sermons, must be of real utility to all pastors. (2s. and 3s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The Cape General Mission have issued a pretty little packet of PILGRIM SONGS, by Miss E. May Grimes, one of the mission workers. They will give good cheer and courage to pilgrims pressing Zionward. Assorted packets of a dozen leaflets, 4d. (Marshall Bros.)

SPIRITUALISM FORBIDDEN OF GOD, by F. C. B. F., is a brief but faithful warning against a flagrant evil. It shows from Scripture that the source of the practice is Satanic and not Divine, and quotes the admissions of spiritualists to the same effect. (1½d. Morrish.)

THE FOLD-OVER Y.W.C.A. ALMANACK FOR 1896 is as attractive as editor and printer can make it, and the quality of its contents is even better than its appearance. The book almanack and motto card are issued as usual. The almanack has been translated into three Indian and several other languages. The Almanack may be obtained at the Y.W.C.A. Bookstall, 316, Regent-street, W.

As regularly as the New Year approaches, we welcome a seasonable booklet by Rev. J. T. Wrenford, of Newport. The title of the latest publication in this beautiful series is "THOU ART MINE!" (6d. per dozen. Partridge.) Here, in sixteen neat pages, printed on tinted paper, we have precious truths for God's children, conveyed in choice language and with deep spirituality of tone. We wish this bright booklet a large circulation.

OBITUARY.

MRS. R. C. MORGAN.

On Saturday morning, 23rd inst., after a severe attack of bronchitis, Lydia Margaret, the beloved wife of Richard Cope Morgan, the Editor of The Christian, fell on sleep, at Bournemouth. She had been for many years a constant sufferer.

DR. MACLEOD, NEWPORT, N.B.

The death is announced of Rev. N. Macleod, D.D., the F.C. minister in this Fifeshire town. For some time he had been suffering from a serious internal complaint, and last week he succumbed. In the early years of his ministry he was for a period an assistant to the late Thomas Guthrie, and drank in much of the zealous spirit of that famous preacher. In 1851 he was ordained to the Newport pastorate, where he has since remained in labours abundant.

REV. W. H. McMECHAN, BARNES.

The pastor of the Baptist chapel at Barnes died very suddenly on Monday week, having preached twice in his own pulpit on the preceding day, his morning text being "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also." Mr. McMechan was a man of much culture and preaching ability. In 1863, after a course of study at Dublin University and at Bristol College, he went out as a missionary to China under the auspices of the Baptist Missionary Society. Ill-health occasioning his return, he accepted a home pastorate. During the last few months he has been conducting the services in the new chapel in Barnes; before which he ministered at Park-road, Brixton-hill, and at Maze Pond Chapel, Old Kent-road. He leaves a widow and a family of eight children.

PROFESSOR LUMBY.

The death is announced of Rev. Dr. Joseph Rawson Lumby, Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. A native of Stanningley, near Leeds, he had a distinguished career at Cambridge, where he took his degree in 1858. He was elected a Fellow and Dean of St. Catharine's College, and subsequently was Norrisian Professor of Divinity, being appointed to the Lady Margaret Professorship of Divinity three years ago. He was formerly vicar of St. Edward's, Cambridge, and was examining chaplain to the Archbishop of York for seven years. He had also acted as examining chaplain to the Bishop of Carlisle. In 1887 he became canon of Wetwang in York Minster. He was a founder and an active worker of the Early English Text Society. He was also one of the Old Testament revisers, and made important and numerous contributions to modern theology.

REV. W. DICKENS LEWIS, D.D.

This well-known Welsh minister passed away on Monday week, at Shrewsbury. He had for several months been incapacitated for work by ill-health, brought about by over-exertion whilst visiting Italy and other Continental countries on behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Dr. Lewis, who was sixty years of age, entered the Calvinistic Methodist ministry when very young. In 1869 he entered the service of the British and Foreign Bible Society as secretary and deputation, taking charge of North Wales, Shropshire, and the Cambrian Societies in England, which post he filled up to his death. There was no post of honour in his Connexion which Dr. Lewis did not fill. In his time he was examiner of Bala College and Synodical examiner; he delivered the charge at the annual ordination services, and was Moderator of the North Wales Association. He travelled extensively on the Continent and in America. In his early life he was a banker, and relinquished a lucrative post in London in order to devote himself wholly to ministerial work.

REV. PETER MACKENZIE.

This famous Wesleyan preacher and lecturer (whose portrait and sketch we gave a year ago) died last week at his home in Dewsbury. A month ago he caught cold after a lecture, and although he struggled on for a week he broke down, and took to his bed to rise no more. He entered the ministry in 1858 with little or no education. Indeed, when he offered himself as a candidate for the ministry, he was accepted with some misgiving, owing to his lack of culture, but there was never any reason to regret the decision. On the contrary, Peter Mackenzie quickly showed that he possessed remarkable capacity as an evangelist amongst the class to which he belonged, and for many years he has been one of the most useful and honoured men in the Connexion. He was already married when, in 1859, he was sent to Didsbury Wesleyan College, Manchester, to receive his ministerial training. After serving many years he became, in 1886, a supernumerary. Since then he has by no means led an idle life. Throughout the country he has acquired a reputation as a vigorous preacher and an entertaining lecturer, and from the day he settled at Dewsbury until he was laid aside by illness he journeyed hither and thither, sometimes travelling a thousand miles in a week, fulfilling engagements in the pulpit and on the lecture platform. Gifted with a strong sense of humour and with much natural eloquence, his services were constantly in demand, and there is little doubt that by his popularity and unceasing efforts he has raised more money for Methodist funds than any living individual. He was warm-hearted, genial, and benevolent, and his death will be deeply and widely deplored.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Hulme.—An eight days' mission has been conducted by Mr. William Forbes, at the Melbourne-street Mission, Hulme, a branch of the Chorlton Road Congregational Church, Manchester. Many have been influenced for good.

Ireland.—Evangelistic services have been held in Drumquin and Newtownstewart by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist evangelists; and similar services have been held in St. Mark's Church, Dublin, by Rev. Canon Robinson, rector of Delgany.

Southampton.—Mr. G. H. Shaw, of the Country Towns Mission, London, has held a sixteen days' mission at the Gospel Hall, West-end, Southampton. The addresses were very much appreciated by Christians, and several persons professed decision.

Penge.—Mr. Charles Inglis brought a ten days' mission at Penge Tabernacle to a close on Wednesday evening, November 20. Bible-readings were held each weekday afternoon, and were well attended and greatly appreciated. The evening congregations increased considerably as the mission proceeded. At the close of Mr. Inglis's last address, about forty persons stood up and testified to blessing received during the mission.

Tonbridge.—Mr. Monro Collings has concluded a five days' mission at the Cage Green Hall, Tonbridge. His addresses have been interesting and impressive, and as a result some of those we have long been praying for have definitely decided for Christ. Mr. Collings has promised to return on December 19 and conduct a meeting for men on the purity question in the Public Hall. For this we ask special prayer. W. Mitchell.

Peckham.—A ten days' mission, conducted by Mr. Ned Wright, at the Clifton Mission Hall, Peckham, has been accompanied with rich blessing. Every night sinners have been seeking the Saviour. The meetings were well attended, and numbers unable to gain admittance to the hall, were glad to be allowed to stand in the adjoining room. We praise God for his manifold blessings bestowed during the mission. Wm. Davies.

Waterford.—A mission, under the auspices of the Young Men's Society of Christian Endeavour, was held in Waterford, by Mr. W. R. Lane, from November 3 to 8. The numbers attending increased each day, and some of the meetings were indescribably solemn. Much good is believed to have been done, and Mr. Lane has left behind him in Waterford a feeling of warm appreciation and regard. During the mission Mr. Lane gave a most helpful series of Bible readings on the Christian life.

Chatton, Northumberland.—On Wednesday week a fifteen days' mission was concluded by Mr. James Goodchild (of the Open-air Mission, London) in the Presbyterian church. The Chatton district is rather sparsely populated, and the weather was unfavourable. The attendances were not generally large, though on some occasions they were good. A very fine spirit, however, was manifested, and some professed to have received definite blessing. A great feature of the mission was the open-air singing.

Winnipeg.—Rev. George C. Grubb concluded his mission in Holy Trinity Church, Winnipeg, Canada, on Nov. 4. Each day witnessed an eager throng of hearers, increasing in number day by day. Numerous testimonies have been given of blessing received through the mission. Prayer is requested for the missions which Mr. Grubb proposes to hold as follows:—In Hamilton, Toronto, Port Hope, Portsmouth, Brockville, Montreal, Quebec, St. John's, Charlotte Town, Halifax, which will probably occupy him to the end of April, 1896.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has closed a successful fortnight's mission in St. Luke's Schools, Sheffield. The attendance increased night by night, men predominating. At the close of the services, the evangelist invited those troubled with doubts to remain behind, among the number being some well-known infidels, to whom he spoke and gave books. In addition to these meetings Mr. Bradlaugh has taken dinner-hour services in some of the large works, where he has scattered broadcast quantities of anti-infidel literature. He hopes to begin a mission on Sunday in the Empire Theatre, Stockton-on-Tees.

Soldiers' Home, Spital Tongues, Newcastle.—A six days' special mission came to a close on Monday, November 18. Each night the boys and girls flocked in to the services. Mr. and Mrs. Jameson, Mr. and Mrs. Procter, with Miss Ethel Procter, and Ebenezer, a black boy servant, spoke to them of God's great plan of salvation. We have every reason to believe that several boys and girls gave themselves to the Saviour, while others were much impressed. A few adults also received blessing. Prayer is asked for God's blessing on Gospel services for soldiers and women in barracks that many souls may be saved. H. Draper.

Aberdeen.—A most successful two weeks' mission has been conducted in the Union-grove Baptist chapel by Mr. Henry Thorne. The special feature of the mission has been the large number of young people who were attracted to the services, and who night after night came forward and testified that they had found the Saviour. This is the more remarkable as Mr. Thorne's discourses were not particularly adapted to the young, but consisted of thoughtful and weighty presentations of the great truths of the Gospel. The church has been greatly stimulated by his visit, and, in addition to the actual conversions forces have been set at work whose effects will be seen in after days.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. James Wharton is leaving, per s.s. Etruria, on Saturday, 30th, for the Southern States, to spend another winter in labour among the freedmen, to whom he has been carrying the Gospel for the last nineteen years. Unhappily there are few evangelists with these people, considering their number (eight millions), and many open doors among them. Prayer is asked that God may use him.

Mrs. Evered Poole has been suffering from an affection of the heart for two or three months, and is now ordered by her physicians to give up all work, and to take complete rest for some months to come, in the hope that thereby, through the blessing of God, she may recover her strength, and be enabled at some future date to resume the labours of love in which she delights.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

For several years past there has been a Seamen and Fishermen's Institute at Southwick, near Brighton, established and carried on by a few local friends. The place has been, and is still, well attended, and the work has brought blessing to many. To ensure the further development and continuance of this useful work, the Institute has been given to the Society.

A special mission, conducted by Rev. G. J. and Mrs Hill has been brought to a close by a public meeting. Mr. W. Willett presided, and was supported by a number of friends from Brighton. Colonel F. Roberts spoke highly of the missionary and the work, which for some time had been under his own superintendence. He rejoiced it was now to be placed on a firmer footing, having, through the generosity of a friend, been placed in the hands of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society; a mission which he was confident would continue to work it on precisely the old lines, viz., "Jesus Christ first and everything." In response to the chairman's call, brief and earnest testimonies were given by a number of friends, including coastguards and fishermen.

A TEN DAYS' TEMPERANCE MISSION has been held at Wimbledon, taken part in by the clergy, Nonconformist ministers, and doctors. Over 450 pledges were taken.

LAMBETH RAGGED SCHOOL SOCIETY.—The jubilee meeting of this local union was held on Wednesday week in Brixton Hall, which was well filled, especially by ladies who interest themselves in this useful and benevolent work. From an abstract of the report, it appears that in the year just closed the income was not sufficient, so that the balance at the end of the year was only half of that with which it commenced. There, are, however, all the regular religious and secular agencies in full operation. Sir John Hutton, L.C.C., who presided, gave due honour to the revered name of the late Lord Shaftesbury, who, if not the founder, was closely associated with the beginning of this movement. Passing in review the course of the last fifty years, he showed how much had been done by legislation and by public action to mitigate the evils of overwork among the juvenile population, pointing out at the same time that a great deal remained to be done, especially in the direction of the earlier closing of shops. Other speakers on the programme were Hon. Lionel Ashley, Mr. Walter Hazell, M.P., Colonel Ford, L.C.C., and Rev. H. Hewett.

THE CHILDREN'S HOMES

(REV. DR. STEPHENSON'S)

Maintain 930 children, of both sexes, from all parts of the country—belonging to all churches and to no church—of all ages, and on the sole ground of want, exposure, and moral peril. The Dean of Canterbury, Dr. J. H. Rigg, Sir Henry H. Fowler, Dr. Clifford, Mr. J. J. Colman, and many others support its claims. The support depends on voluntary contributions. Additional houses could readily be built if income were forthcoming to maintain them. Applications come in daily for necessitous cases. Contributions will be thankfully received by Rev. Dr. STEPHENSON, Bonner-road, London, N.E., or may be sent to the Publishers of "THE CHRISTIAN." Cheques crossed "City Bank."

MISSIONARIES IN ARMENIA.—Mr. Terrell, U.S Minister at Constantinople, has received a telegram from Aintab, dated 23rd inst., announcing the safety of all the missionaries, including Miss Macdonald, of Wimbledon, an English teacher, and adding that at the request of the United States Legation the missionaries have been offered prompt and full protection. The United States Minister is now confident that the missionaries in Anatolia, numbering 172, are safe. Another telegram from Aintab states that during the recent serious disturbances at that place the foreigners were all protected by the authorities, and to this fact they owe their lives.

LEYSIAN MEDICAL MISSION.—In their last report of the Leysian Medical Mission and Mothers' Meetings, Dr. and Mrs. Griffith say:—"The Medical Mission is as great a boon as ever, and the numbers who attend the mothers' meeting constantly increase, and with the increase the expenses are greater. Our Bible-woman is devoted, and the visits we pay the women in their own homes, lead them to value still more, and to understand better the Bible teaching they receive at the meetings. We suffer from one great disadvantage, viz.: that extensive though it is, our work is neither fashionable nor known beyond our own immediate circle, so that appeals to the public meet with no response." The new address of Dr. Griffith is 36, Upper Bedford-place, W.C.

CONSUMPTION, AND ALL CHEST DISEASES.

INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

103rd INTERVIEW

With an Old Patient at Galashiels, N.B.

"THE LUNGS BREAKING UP."

This case has not been published before.

For personal reasons connected with business, the gentleman referred to in this interview is anxious that his name and full address should not be printed, but he is quite ready to answer any person really interested as to the genuineness and permanence of the cure effected by Mr. Congreve's treatment.

This patient, when I called upon him, looked the picture of health, although his recovery dates some years back and his occupation necessitates a great amount of walking in all kinds of weather.

"I first applied to Mr. Congreve for advice and medicine," he informed me, "in March, 1882, at which time I was living in Selkirk. I had previously been ill a long time, commencing with scarlet fever in the previous October. I took cold before I had recovered, and this was followed by great weakness, vomiting of blood, and much offensive expectoration. An attack of pleurisy supervened and I became very ill. The doctor who was attending me said I was in consumption, and, in answer to a question of my wife's, told her the lungs were breaking up. As I got no better, and seeing a reference to Mr. Congreve's treatment in a weekly journal, I wrote to him as a last resource. I took his medicine for a long time (having several relapses through taking cold), but ultimately, through steady perseverance, I quite recovered my health. Since that time I have remained well, and for the last seven years have not once had the doctor."

In answer to a question, this old patient told me that he had recommended the treatment to many persons in Selkirk and had seen good results in other cases besides his own.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

CORPULENCY.

INCREASING POPULARITY OF AN EFFECTUAL CURE.

Many of our readers are doubtless familiar with the nature of the extraordinary revolution in the cure of obesity which, within recent years, has been wrought by the original researches of that now eminent expert, Mr. F. Cecil Russell, of Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C. It is evident that the certainty, the rapidity, and the agreeable surroundings of his curative process have been recognised, in a very large degree, among ladies and gentlemen belonging to the highest social circles. Keen observers who have an opportunity of judging inform us, through the pages of Society papers and otherwise, that, owing to the general employment of Mr. Russell's treatment, extreme obesity is becoming as much a thing of the past at fashionable gatherings as intoxication; and, no doubt, it will soon be regarded as nearly as disgraceful. The issue of an eighteenth edition of the author's singularly convicting little text-book, "Corpulency and the Cure," however, serves to remind us that the popularity of the system has now reached spheres far remote from those of West-End fashion. The book of 256 pages may be had, post free, by sending six penny stamps to Mr. Russell's offices, as above; and it is worth the careful attention of those who wish to free themselves of a burden of fat—not merely because it is unseemly and adds enormously to the apparent age of the sufferer—but because extreme obesity terribly interferes with the energy necessary in these days of competition to make one's way in the world, or even to earn a very modest competency. A large proportion of the letters of Mr. Russell's grateful correspondents refer to their delight at being enabled—within a very brief period and without any irksome conditions implying semi-starvation—to attack their accustomed tasks with pleasure instead of wearied disgust, through being reduced to their normal weight. The popularity of the system is also largely due, doubtless, to the English hatred of mystery, which is utterly swept aside by Mr. Russell. He fully explains his modus operandi, and supplies the recipe for his preparation.

Notes and Comments.

MISS SHARMAN has been prevented by illness at one of the Homes and pressure of work in London, from arranging a public meeting this year. We commend her work of faith and labour of love to our readers' sympathy and prayer.

As Dr. A. T. Pierson's visit approaches, a goodly programme of meetings is being drawn up. Beginning at Liverpool, where he will labour from Jan. 1 to 5, Dr. Pierson will visit Wales, the West of England, and Ireland during the first three months; and during the next quarter he will travel in Scotland and the Midland counties, returning to London for conferences at Exeter Hall and Mildmay. Those who wish to arrange for local gatherings should write to Rev. F. B. Meyer, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, S.E.

Another missionary and his wife have fallen in the field as martyrs; some of the disbanded Malagasy having killed Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, of the Society of Friends' Mission. This danger was not unexpected, though none could tell where the blow might fall. Yet we believe the missionaries have done right to remain at their posts; as an intelligent Hova testified, it has kept the faith of the people in Christianity more than anything else they could have done.

Mr. William Noble, whose temperance labours are so well known, once made an experiment down in Shoreditch and Whitechapel which seems to be worthy of imitation; he gave an address or a recitation on Saturday nights, and then offered the penny New Testament for sale; as many as thirteen hundred were sold one night in the heart of Whitechapel. Could not others who have a gift for recitation thus get the ear of the people, and then offer them a good book at a cheap rate which they would prize and perhaps assimilate? Penny portions of the Scriptures are very popular among the poor; such favourite books as Proverbs, the Psalms, etc., being sometimes in great demand.

A Jewish missionary, writing to us from Jerusalem, unwittingly confirms these statements: "Jerusalem (he says) is in a disturbed state. Soldiers and recruits are in great numbers. Many reports are flying about." Not a few will see in this centring of events around the Holy City, fresh indications that "the time is at hand" when God's purposes concerning his own city and people are to be fulfilled.

That was a wise as well as truthful child who made the confession: "I don't remember breaking any of the commandments, but I am afraid I cracked some of them." It needs a certain amount of courage openly to violate a law, human or Divine, but the little deeds and courses of conduct that are almost and yet not quite a violation, are as easy as the spirit that takes refuge in them is cowardly. The life of many professors of religion is scored with the subtle fractures that result from little sins, like tempers, little acts of insincerity, and selfishness. It is possible to crack a costly vase so finely that it cannot be noticed by the closest scrutiny; but let this be done again and again in different directions, and some day the vessel will suddenly fall to pieces at a touch, and without a sound.

When we hear of someone who has had a lifelong reputation for good character and consistent living, suddenly falling into shameful sin, we are shocked and scandalised, and puzzled. If we knew all, we should find that the fall has only been sudden in its manifestation; right away back in the life there are a thousand "cracked" commandments, and the final public exposure is but the falling of the vase to pieces, whose beauty has long been a lie and a pretence.

This is unquestionably the prime lesson we should learn from the exposure and punishment of Jabez Balfour. His fall, at the time when the Liberator exposures took place, was a problem to many. We now see the meaning of it all. By reading the evidence at the trial just concluded, we can see how his career was a slow but sure descent into evil; one fraud leading to another insensibly, till at last the edifice of wrong which he had reared with such amazing skill, toppled over like a castle of cards. He cracked one and another of the commandments, and at last he broke them, and made others break them, and they involved one another in a common ruin and shame, which has now been brought home.

The annals of modern crime do not furnish us with a more startling instance of the sure Nemesis that dogs the footsteps of the transgressor. The doom of Jabez Balfour is a fine commentary on the old text, "I will sweep away the refuge of lies." With all our faults as a nation, our courts of justice are, generally speaking, marked by a spirit of righteousness and truth. The way this criminal was tracked, his subterfuges exposed and defeated, his person seized and brought to justice; the gradual weaving around him of the close-knit network of evidence, in which he twisted and wriggled all in vain, until at last his doom was sealed with an appropriate sentence, has been a splendid object-lesson for the benefit of defaulting directors and dishonest business men throughout the land. To the believer it will be a confirmation of his faith that God rules and reigns, and that his footsteps, though slow and merciful, will unfailingly track sin to its lair, and drag it forth into judgment.

The most general comment of the secular Press points to a state of things which causes one to tremble for our country; it is to the effect that the only difference between Balfour and a large number of men who are going about among us is that he has been found out, and—as yet—they have not. The Times, e.g., says that "things are done with impunity every day which are morally indistinguishable from the operations for which Balfour has been sentenced, although they may have been more skilfully steered through the meshes of the law."

The law which punishes, when men are found out, will, no doubt, have an influence upon the moral tone of the trading community, but we must be instant in season and out of season in insisting upon absolute honesty in trade. The system—for it is so common as to be a system—of taking commission from both parties to a bargain; of receiving "tips" from representatives of a firm which wishes to sell; of overlooking faults in goods on account of "a consideration,"—all this is as bad, as demoralising, and as debasing as it can be. No man can be honest to his master who also takes pay from his master's customers or tradesmen; he cannot take money with both hands, and be upright. Men should scorn being offered a dinner and a seat at the opera, and a bottle of champagne—and worse things—if they will only give an order; and they should be ashamed to ask for them. "A balance of deceit is abomination to the Lord" is a word of truth, which includes directors' reports as well as a grocer's scales.

Mingled with expressions of intense grief for the death of Rev. Peter Mackenzie, and concurrently with warmest appreciation of the man, are words of regret on the part of some of his admirers, that he did not, all through his life, confine himself to the direct preaching of the Gospel. His brilliant and entertaining lectures gradually encroached upon his pulpit work, and although they were in parts very powerful in their religious earnestness and searching in their moral fire, yet they were not a substitute for the simple word of reconciliation. But he is gone, a generous heart, a burning spirit, a shining genius, a happy Christian; and we, perhaps, are not such good judges of his duty as he himself was.

The Daily News of Thursday last had, from its correspondent in Syria, a remarkable article on "Turkish Anarchy," opening with the statement that "the whole of Syria and Palestine is flooded with Turkish soldiers." The hosts of lawless men thus brought together, without discipline and without food, are everywhere committing depredations and outrages. All, it seems, are fired with hatred of the Christians, and ready for any excesses. "Jerusalem," says the writer, "is crowded with the military," and the situation is very grave indeed.

It is interesting to note the different purposes to which some public buildings are put at different times. We recently commented on the fact that the Primitive Methodists have acquired the late George Dawson's chapel in Birmingham, and now The Sydney Telegraph announces that the Lyceum Freethought Hall in Campbell-street, which cost £4500, and was dedicated "to the destruction of Christianity and Godism in Sydney," has been bought for half the money by the Church of Christ. Strangest of all, one of the speakers at the opening of the Hall for Christian work (now a City missionary) was a former vice-president of the Secularists' Society, and the first person to profess conversion was a gentleman who was formerly secretary of the Freethought party. Men who do think on the great questions which divide Christianity and Secularism, especially if they are honest of heart and upright in life, are more likely to be converted than are nominal Christians who are steeped in worldliness, and give little serious thought to the things of God.

There is good news from Monte Carlo. A writer in the Pall Mall Magazine "from behind the scenes" gives ample statistical proofs that the prosperity of the great gambling company that has been the making of the place (and the ruin of those who frequent it), is fast on the wane. A few years ago the income of the company amounted to a million pounds sterling, and the original £20 shares had run up to £100 in value, on which ten per cent. was regularly paid. There have been, however, two very "bad" winter seasons, and the dividends are steadily declining. As an immediate consequence the salaries of employés are being cut down, expenditure is being lessened, and various devices are being resorted to in order that the tide may be brought back. The question of interest for us is whether this form of iniquity—the gambling mania—is on the wane?

It is only too probable that one reason for the depression at Monte Carlo is the gold-boom in England, for a large proportion of the "plungers" that help to create the "roulette" craze at Monte Carlo come from this country. But we sincerely hope that the anti-gambling crusade has something to do with it. People are slowly awakening to the magnitude of this evil that lurks like a serpent in the very homes of our land, and destroys some of its fairest men and women. We must redouble our efforts against the wrong, and show the young people what a terrible hell of ruin and remorse lies behind its seemingly harmless excitements. Speaking of Monte Carlo, Mr. Waller, in concluding his paper in the Pall Mall Magazine, says:—"There is no hope of its being closed...but if the English people would only restrain their passion for punting at roulette for another five years as they have shown themselves capable of doing during the past winter or two, the dividend will come out zero, and the bank will be broken, not in name only, but also in deed." For which may all Christians devoutly pray!

One of the most serious aspects of the rapidly-spreading system of limited companies is the lack of an adequate check on oppression of employés, for which they give such ample opportunity. Mr. Weisse, of Rugby, calls attention to this fact in a striking letter in Saturday's Daily News on the hardships of young clerks, amounting to sweating, under the most unhealthy conditions, of lads in the growing stage, when they are in special need of physical care. He tells us of cases in which young boys, well educated and intelligent, are kept at work from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the most uninteresting routine work, in badly lighted offices, while their Saturday half-holidays and Bank holidays are often curtailed or taken away from them altogether. The victims of this system of heartless tyranny are unable to help themselves, for they are too widely scattered over the country in very small groups to co-operate, and the competition for this kind of employment is so keen that they dare not throw up their situations. "It is a sorry case for 'education,'" as Mr. Weisse says, "if huge money-making concerns can employ intelligent and educated lads of seventeen or eighteen at £20 or £30 a year under conditions to which no labourer would consent."

The remedy for this state of things is threefold. First, those Christian people who hold shares in any commercial company must learn their responsibilities and act upon them. They should see that their dividends are rightly earned, and that the Scriptural principle is followed, "The labourer that laboureth must be the first to partake of the fruits" (2 Tim. ii. 6), i.e., fair wages before profits. Secondly, these shareholders should attend, or be represented, at all meetings held for the settlement of accounts and the control of directors, and insist that the business be carried on according to Christian principles.

Thirdly, full publicity should be given to all cases such as those which Mr. Weisse deals with, so that the pressure of public opinion may be brought to bear on those directors or shareholders who are responsible for the state of things complained of. "The companies, who are quick to reform and improve whatever public criticism can reach or competition enforce, will go on with their present iniquitous system until a strong public feeling obliges them to alter it." The remedy is thus clearly in the hands of the Christian public, and they should see that this new form of "white slavery" is put an end to.

One cannot help wondering what will be the effect upon Russia of the free circulation of the Scriptures. The living preacher of the Gospel is not allowed to preach freely, but the printed page, which may go anywhere, has a wide circulation. The circulation means readers, and many signs appear that the readers become believers and doers of the Word. The number of men who, on conscientious grounds, refuse to serve in the army is an evidence that a deep movement is going on in the minds of the multitude. It is said that the peasantry hate conscription, and that if conscientious objections to soldiering were allowed to exempt from service, millions of men would become Russian Quakers. That would not be altogether a blessing; too much chaff would come with the wheat; but the significant thing is that the Gospels have so thoroughly leavened the thought of that huge and powerful nation. May it soon take effect in a change of policy towards the best subjects the Czar rules over.

How suggestive are the observations of Rev. A. P. Begg, of Calcutta, as to the change which takes place in the form, but not in the nature of evils. He says that the widows of India "have been saved literally as brands plucked from the burning; but they have not seldom been spared thus for a life that has, alas, been too often a life of physical and moral degradation." "The devil has gone out of many things in India as a barbarous demon, but he has come back as a polished and civilised fiend; and he is more difficult to fight in the latter guise." So we may say of every country; it always has been so. We are not ignorant of Satan's devices. Beaten in one form he assumes another; driven from one stronghold he betakes himself to another. But our Lord was manifested to destroy his works.

The broad international effects of mission work are beginning to make themselves felt, and will do so more and more. In Central Africa, e.g., where the German sphere embraces the work of some English missionaries, the representatives of German authority have shown themselves both considerate and just. They have had the good sense to consult the missionaries on the peculiarities of native life, and learn from them how to deal with native character. They have shown a thorough appreciation of the work done, and no doubt have sense enough to see that the missionary will make the native a kind of man whom it will be profitable to rule and trade with. At the ends of the earth the old nations touch in a way that is perhaps more promotive of kindly feeling than is their intercourse nearer home.

"What our families are to read" is one of the pressing questions of the day, which our churches may well take their share in helping to solve. A pastor writes:—

> In addition to a good library there should be a suitable person appointed in every Sunday-school to act as literary secretary, whose business is to recommend a list of periodicals and magazines of a high moral tone and definite religious character, soliciting regular subscribers for their supply. The church through its school will in this way provide wholesome reading for the family, such as will supplement, and not supplant (as is often now the case) the teaching of the pulpit and the class upon the Lord's Day. This I did in my first church with a great measure of success, and am now preparing a list in my present one for the year 1896.

The suggestion is worthy the attention of pastors and church officers; for there are few habits of life which more seriously affect home and church alike, for good or ill, than the private reading we indulge in for profit or for idle pleasure.

The late M. Alexandre Dumas understood human nature on some sides at least. "It is useless," he would say, "to combat the opinions of others. Opinions are like nails; the more one hits them on the head the deeper one drives them in. Our power is restricted to repeating what appears to us to be truth." A most successful newspaper editor went always on that tack, and kept repeating things he wanted his readers to believe; he never argued, but only asserted. Is not the power of the Gospel in itself? and is it not best to keep declaring it rather than assailing opinions that are contrary to it? Deeds which are contrary to it we may condemn, for our condemnation has an echo in the offender's heart.

While we entirely agree with a contemporary, which says that the evangelists say very little about the incarnation, but much about the death of our Lord, we cannot agree with the further remark—

> It is evident that their eyes and hearts were fixed not upon the miraculous birth, but upon the miraculous death.

If proportion is observed by us, as it was by the Evangelists, we shall have a place for birth, and life, and death, and resurrection, and ascension. Who can think of the one without implying the other? The evangelists and apostles evidently thought much of every part of our Lord's history, his sayings as well as his sufferings, else they would not have preserved four accounts of what he did, and suffered, and spoke; and Paul always carefully keeps all in due relation. It is this forcing things out of their place, which becomes the occasion of false doctrine; and that too when the desire is to preserve the true, and keep out the false.

A Novelist Preacher.

Marie Corelli is not a favourite of the critics and reviewers. We have only read two of her books, "Barabbas" and "The Sorrows of Satan." We do not commit ourselves to the author's views of the robber or the fiend. Yet, if one of the thieves repented, there is no impossibility in the robber having become a worshipper. Miss Corelli's ideal fiend is neither true to the Satan of Scripture, nor to the experience of this sin-blighted and devil-trodden world. The title of the book, too, is painfully incongruous, when we remember that Satan is the malignant cause of the sorrows of our Redeemer, the Man of Sorrows. Yet the book shows up the sins of the age, and the inevitable consequences of sin, in a way much more like the old-time preaching than the vapid and cruel platitudes uttered from half the pulpits in this Victorian era.

Its heroine is the beautiful daughter of an impoverished earl and his depraved countess. The girl is sold in marriage to a millionaire, and three months later she poisons herself, thinking it better to die than to live, having come to the conclusion that there is no God and no hereafter. She writes her experiences before and after the fatal draught. These are the closing sentences, when already she is made to know that there is a living God, and that death is not extinction :—

"A horrible fear has suddenly beset me. What if death were not what the scientists deem it—suppose it were another form of life? Can it be that I am losing reason and courage together?...or what is this terrible misgiving that is taking possession of me...a feeling that I cannot define. I am dying...dying!—I repeat this to myself for comfort...in a little while I shall be deaf and blind, and unconscious...Why then is the silence around me now broken through by sound? I listen, and I hear distinctly the clamour of wild voices mingled with a sullen jar and roll as of distant thunder!...My mother stands closer to me...she is stretching out her hand to mine!...

Oh God!...Let me write—write—while I can! Let me yet hold fast the thread which fastens me to earth—give me time—time before I drift out, lost in yonder blackness and flame! Let me write for others the awful truth, as I see it—there is no death! None; none! I cannot die. I am passing out of my body; I am being wrenched away from it inch by inch in inexplicable mystic torture, but I am not dying. I am being carried forward into a new life, vague and vast!...I see a new world full of dark forms, half shaped, yet shapeless! They float towards me, beckoning me on. I am actively conscious; I hear, I think, I know! Death is a mere human dream, a comforting fancy; it has no real existence; there is nothing in the universe but life! O hideous misery! I cannot die! In my mortal body I can scarcely breathe; the pen I try to hold writes of itself rather than through my shaking hand, but these pangs are throes of birth, not death!...I hold back with all the force of my soul; I strive not to plunge into the black abyss I see before me, but my mother drags me with her. I cannot shake her off! I hear her voice now; she speaks distinctly, and laughs as though she wept. 'Come, Sybyl, soul of the child I love, come and meet your lover! Come and see upon WHOM you fixed your faith! Soul of the woman I trained, return to that from whence you came!' Still I hold back, nude and trembling. I stare into a dark void. And now there are wings about me—wings of fiery scarlet! They fill the space, they enfold me, they propel me, they rush past and whirl around me, stinging me as with flying arrows and showers of hail!...

"Let me write on—write on, with this dead fleshly hand. One moment more time, dread God! One moment more to write the truth—the terrible truth of Death, whose darkest secret, Life, is unknown to men. I live! A new, strong, impetuous vitality possesses me, though my mortal body is nearly dead. Faint gasps and weak shudderings affect it still, and I, outside it and no longer of it, propel its perishing hand to write these final words—I live! To my despair and terror, to my remorse and agony, I live! Oh the unspeakable misery of this new life! And worst of all, God, whom I doubted, God, whom I was taught to deny, this wronged, blasphemed, and outraged God exists! And I could have found Him had I chosen—this knowledge is forced upon me as I am torn from hence—it is shouted at me by a thousand wailing voices! ...too late!—too late!—the scarlet wings beat me downward—these strange half-shapeless forms close round and drive me onward...to the further darkness.....amid wind and fire ...Serve me, dead hand, once more ere I depart...my tortured spirit must seize and compel you to write down this thing unnameable, that earthly eyes may read, and earthly souls take timely warning!...I know at last WHOM I have loved!—whom I have chosen, whom I have worshipped!...Oh God, have mercy!...I know WHO claims my worship now, and drags me into yonder rolling world of flame!...his name is ——." We may fill in the blank—her love has been fixed on the Old Serpent, the Devil, and Satan.

There are few living preachers who have realised so forcibly as this novelist the awfulness of death, and what comes after death, to a lost soul. We could wish that for once throughout the land there might be a sermon preached as calculated to awaken, to alarm, to terrify, and, with demonstration of the Eternal Spirit, to convict, sinners who have hitherto hardened their necks, and are in danger of being destroyed, and that without remedy.

Probably we shall be censured for the above quotation. But we regard it as a noteworthy sign of the time that while some preachers are writing novels and narratives, beginning and ending with the life on earth, and veiling the terrors of the second death, a professional novelist tears the veil away, and preaches a soul-startling sermon on the death that never dies. Oh that Christ's witnesses would learn both the goodness and the severity of God; that they might so testify as to torment them that dwell upon the earth, men of the world who have their portion in this life; and declare the blessedness of the dead who die in the Lord, who rest from their labours and their works do follow them.

THE INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY (East London division) held last week an industrial exhibition and sale of work in the People's Palace. This Society is doing excellent work by holding classes for the religious and social improvement of the blind, and in visiting them regularly at their own homes. There are some 400 blind persons in the East-end alone coming under the operations of the Society, and they are taught reading under the Braille and Moon systems, writing, arithmetic, geography, crochet, knitting, and needlework. Largely-attended meetings of a religious and social character are periodically held, and wherever possible the blind people are encouraged to earn their own living, while cases of distress are relieved as far as the funds permit.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

The leaders in this ancient Society learned long ago the value and fruitfulness of open-air work, and hence much attention is given to its conduct. A meeting was held the other evening to hear reports of what has been done out of doors during the past season. The local superintendents were asked to furnish the details of the work. Most of the twenty-one stations being represented, an hour and a-half was occupied by the workers, when interesting details and particulars were furnished, all tending to prove the absolute necessity of this kind of evangelistic work to reach the enormous number of street-idlers and passers-by found in almost every quarter, and mostly composed of those who never enter a place of worship.

Among the points of interest brought out during the meeting, we may mention the readiness of the people to stand and listen, not only to the music and singing, which always attracts, but the plain Gospel addresses delivered, especially those by working men and others who know the condition of the working classes, and know their objections to religion, and who adapt their remarks so as to meet these objections. To such addresses all attention had been given, while at some of the stations in Spitalfields large numbers of Jews listened with close and apparently deep attention to the speakers. In this matter the whole of the statements were conclusive.

Another point of interest was the gratitude shown by many of the hearers, as well as the great respect for the workers manifested by the people living close to the stations. In two cases the services were held on the steps and right in front of public-houses, where the publicans opened their windows and listened most attentively, and at night would light their lamps early for the benefit of the service; and one landlady brought seats out, and placed her young people upon them to have the full benefit of the service. Not one service had been complained of, interfered with by the police, or broken up during the whole season.

At one station a Harvest Thanksgiving meeting was held. A large quantity of fruit, cut flowers, bread, etc., had been given, and was displayed, and attracted a large audience, and a most interesting service was the result, while the grapes and flowers were presented to the poor old people in the Shoreditch Infirmary, and were a great boon to them.

A number of conversions were reported, and one convert attended, and gave an interesting experience that was very cheering to the workers. As to the stations, a goodly number had been in back, unfrequented courts and alleys, where dense populations are located, but where the preachers had a hearty welcome, the doors and windows being opened; the poor people paid close attention, and seem much pleased to find they were not forgotten.

Only one thing was to be regretted, and that was the opposition at one or two stations by Romanists and Ritualists, but even in these cases the work has been fully maintained.

FINSBURY PARK RESCUE AND PREVENTIVE ASSOCIATION.—This work is carried on entirely by voluntary helpers (excepting the matrons). The lady superintendents freely devote a great portion of their lives in this service; all that Christian influence, motherly love, sympathy, and kindness can do is willingly bestowed in endeavouring to lead back their erring sisters to paths of womanliness and virtue, and afford them an opportunity of redeeming their characters and becoming useful members of society. During their residence in the Home, the girls are trained in laundry work, needlework, and general household duties, and when not returned to their friends, situations are readily obtained for them as domestic servants in Christian families. It is most pleasing to find how many of them appreciate the interest taken in their welfare, and continue to attend the meetings held at the home from week to week for their benefit. Contributions either of money or clothing will be most thankfully received. Every penny bestowed is strictly applied for rescue and preventive work, or in providing food and clothing for the inmates of the Home. John Sellers, Hon. Treasurer.

THE MOTOR OF MISSIONS.*

By President R. S. STORRS, D.D., LL.D.

It is one of the great things about which we are all agreed, that the power of God is in a special sense and an extraordinary measure behind this work of proclaiming his Gospel in which is his own revelation of Himself to all mankind. How apt we are to feel that the work is going forward simply by human instrumentality; and yet if there is anything that history shows, it is that there is that silent transcendent, imperial, imperishable power always working for its advancement. Remember that Christianity came into the world with the intensest possible opposition of the human will against it. In the form in which we have it and in which we delight and continue to extend it in the earth, it tolerates no lust, it allows no liberty of animal passion, it consents to no pride on the part of man, it calls him to humbleness and to holiness, and against that summons the spirit in man impetuously and imperiously revolts. And yet, coming into the world thus, and carried abroad by a few mechanics, it conquered the Roman Empire.

It seemed beforehand as impossible that it should do that as that it should turn the Apennines into a prairie or scoop up the Mediterranean in a child's cup and pour it out beyond the Gates of Hercules into the ocean. But it accomplished that, and the sign of the Cross on the banner of the Empire is the continual witness to it for all time. In the contest of the early middle ages between faith and barbarism, between the faithful disciples and your ancestors and mine—painted savages, robbers, and murderers in the forests, and pirates on the seas—it was this Gospel of Christ which conquered, and over all savagery and all violence of man erected the Christian commonwealth, the life and the power of which are in all the earth to-day. It was in the post-Reformation period as well as in the earlier time, and it is in the world to-day; and wherever the messenger of the Gospel goes there is this silent, transcendent, irresistible power of the Most High behind him. Everything has to give way in the end to that, because this is the cause which is dear to the heart of God.

Missionaries lay down their lives in the service to which they have given them, cultured men and women dying with only dusky faces smiling on them, and only the accents of a foreign tongue falling on their ears, before they hear the acclaiming welcome of the angels in the heavens. There is the Spirit of God in all that. They go, and they are in victorious joy in the midst of privation, and service, and sacrifice. Meanwhile, Christians tarrying at home are overfed with all Christian instruction, their hardest trial to sit patiently through a sermon more than thirty minutes long, who want to ride to heaven on silver-plated bicycles with golden rims and pneumatic tyres, restless, malcontent, ungrateful for the benefits they receive, and querulous for any discomforts they suffer.

Here is a note of victory put into the Christian life by missionary devotion and missionary service. And even after they are gone, how their work spreads and fructifies under the shining of God's face and under the dews of his grace descending on it, so that the grave of a missionary becomes the centre of a circle of Christian disciples. The earth was consecrated once for all by the cross of Christ set up upon it, and it is consecrated afresh by every missionary grave. Every land where a missionary father or mother has fallen is sacred unto God. It is the possession of the Church of Christ.

There is a divine energy behind all this work of declaring the manifestation of God in Christ to the nations who sit in darkness. It is unheard; but the footfalls of Omnipotence are always silent. It is unseen; but the forecasts of Omniscience never reveal themselves in fire and thunder. It is behind all this work, the power of God, which orders the seasons in their march and which swings the sun on the word of his power. It is that power which is for us and for those who go to testify for us of the Gospel of the grace of God.

Then, my friends, here is duty; here is privilege. You are a confessed disciple of Christ? Here is yours. You are one of philanthropic sentiment and impulse? Here is your work. The marvel is that the treasures of the land are not poured into this magnificent enterprise. The mind of the world was delighted when this continent was discovered; the mind of Christendom is delighted, expanded as well as energised, by this history and purpose of modern missions. We draw nearer the heart of Christ in this work; He is exalted before us as our King, as well as our Teacher and our Friend. The privilege of life is to follow in the steps of the Most High, and the one question which comes to us is this: In this prophetic age, in this divinest work, are you who claim to love the Lord willing to keep step with God?

We are to be consecrated to this sublimest service as God's Spirit touches our hearts and his providence puts into our hands the means for performing it. Here is duty; here is privilege, the privilege of working in the sublimest enterprise of the earth, for which multitudes have died, for which the Son of God gave Himself.

"VISIONARIES!"

Men of the world say, "Oh yes, but you are all visionaries: you have an idea of something that can never be realised, and it is idle to call upon us to take part in an enterprise which is essentially chimerical, as this is." Visionaries? They were called visionaries who, in the gloom of the catacombs, foresaw the downfall of the Roman Empire; but the crash came and struck the fetters from their hands and limbs. They were called visionaries who at the beginning said that movable type would batter down fortresses and outlive cathedrals; but it has been done. They were called visionaries who at first uttered the duty and declared the privilege of nations to settle disputes among themselves by arbitration. A dream of the pious—that was the word applied to their scheme—a reverie of the devout, at which practical statesmen and soldiers could only laugh; but arbitration between nations is now, and is to be more and more, the magisterial way of settling great disputes. They were called visionaries in your cities and in ours who saw the sterile and rocky wastes outside the town limits, and believed they could be transformed into the beautiful pleasure grounds of the cities. They were called visionaries who foresaw the emancipation of a race on our shores, and wrought for it and fought for it until it came to pass.

Christ, remember, is the supreme visionary of the world, when He said, as the Greeks came to Him, saying, "We would see Jesus," "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." The disciples thought that He meant lifted up on the throne of his glory, but afterward they had to write, "This spake He, signifying by what death He should die." If there was ever an apparent absurdity uttered in human speech, it was that of the Master: "If I be lifted up on the Roman Cross, for the scoffing of the Jews, for the contempt of the Romans, I by that cross will win and conquer the world." But He is doing it. Let us be visionary, like the disciples in the catacombs, like the prophets of old who foresaw the coming and the glory of the Lord, like the Master Himself, until we rise with all his redeemed and triumphant children to see his face in his glory, with a star for every scar on that majestic and immortal brow, with the crown of thorns replaced by the crown of a celestial and eternal majesty!

DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Meetings in connection with this Mission were held on Tuesday week in the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W., to receive accounts of the summer's evangelisation in the North Sea, and also of the operations on the coast of Labrador.

The afternoon meeting, after an address by Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, was devoted to free and open conference on ways of working. Good accounts were given by various clergymen and other friends who had visited the fleets, of the welcome they had received and of the open doors they found among the trawlers for the Gospel. The circumstances under which the operations are carried on at sea, demand—not formal services—but a free and hearty setting forth of the way of salvation.

At the evening meeting, Mr. T. B. Miller, who presided, gave some details of the Mission and insisted on the importance of the spiritual work, in view of the peculiar perils to which the men are incessantly exposed. In the afternoon a monthly concert in prayer had been proposed. This had been talked over and it had been resolved that all friends of the Mission should be asked to remember specially, on the first Friday in each month, the work of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen among the trawlers.

Mr. Archibald, as chairman of the Spiritual Work committee, spoke of the distribution of Christian and other literature, of a proposed children's league to aid in this, of the library boxes supplied to 200 smacks, of the Fishermen's Christian Association, of the letter writing to cabin boys—which have been blessed to many, and in which over 500 ladies take part—and of the evangelistic service generally in the fleets. These various agencies have been much blessed, and many rough godless men have been led to accept Christ.

Rev. C. H. Hicks followed with an account of his own experiences in the North Sea fleets. Mr. W. Denham spoke on similar lines. Both had seen many tokens of result. Miss Wilkes, who came next, described the work on shore at Gorleston, and urged the need for a Boys' Institute.

Dr. Willway (who spent last winter in icy Labrador) gave some account of what 37 degrees below zero really meant, especially to the half-starved, badly-clothed fishing population. Miss Williams, who has been out all summer, gave details of hospital work at Battle Harbour, and asked prayerful remembrance of Sister Carwardine, who, with Dr. Robinson, has voluntarily chosen to stay out the winter in Labrador and help the people as far as possible.

Miss Woodman spoke of Ymuiden; Rev. F. H. R. Soper of North Sea work, and Skipper Jones of the dangers of the trawlers' calling, and the need for Christian aid.

LADIES' IRISH ASSOCIATION.—We trust that friends who have helped us in the past will not forget our needs in this seventy-third year of the Association. We work very quietly in order to spare the feelings of destitute ladies, and those who have known better days, among whom there is much suffering; and are most grateful for orders for needlework, knitting, or crochet. Every case comes under personal consideration, and no help is given without searching inquiries. Our Scripture readers have carried much blessing into benighted districts of the South and West of Ireland, and the accounts of their toil are most touching. Our funds are exhausted for this branch of the work, though Roman Catholics beg for more teaching, and welcome the Word of Life with opening heart and mind.

GIRLS' HOME, DUBLIN.—The report of the Townsend-street Ragged School and Girls' Home shows that eighteen girls have left the Home during the past year, one to business, fourteen sent out as servants, and three removed by their relatives. Most of these are giving satisfaction to their employers, and doing service as to the Lord. One girl was taken away from the Home by command of the Roman Catholic priest, but she made such a stand, refusing to go to chapel, and going openly to church from her home, that he gave up the idea of putting her into a convent, and she is now in a situation. The Outdoor School reports 106 on the roll. The Gospel meetings have been well attended. The adult Sunday-school numbers about 250, and there have been several interesting conversions. Some country people walk miles to attend this school. The secretaries are the Misses Hyndman, Warwick Villas, Leeson Park, Dublin.

PARABLE OF THE TARES.—5.

ERROR AND DIVISION.

So much, then, for the teaching of Ambrose: are we to call it Christianity, or is it not rather polytheistic Paganism? How had the fine gold become dim! how utterly changed was the nominal Church from that which the Lord Jesus had founded! Of course, amid such abounding superstition, the Gospel of free salvation by the blood of Jesus Christ was altogether lost. These fathers—but we must except Augustine—know not how to deal with the mourning sinner. That is painfully apparent even in the works of one supposed to be among the best of them, John Chrysostom. One of his English translators attempts to defend him by suggesting that "he lived before the prominent development of the doctrine of justification by faith." But the Epistle to the Romans, at least, had been written before his time, and Chrysostom knew it well, and actually delivered upon it a course of homilies which have come down to us. Yet even in these we shall search in vain for the life-giving truth. For he was so much occupied with the "angelic," or "cherubic," sanctity of virginity, with the thought of the "innumerable quires of angels" to be found in the Egyptian deserts in the shape of anchorites and nuns; so enraptured with the glories of "the baptismal pool," into which if even the foulest man should fall, "he ascends from the Divine waters purer than the beams of noon," so filled with the beauty of good works, that he had no inclination to explain how the sinner might be saved through the blood of the Lord Jesus.

Here is his method for getting rid of sin. "Let us," says he, in his seventh homily on the Gospel of John, "reckon up exactly all the wicked deeds which in times past we have dared, and let us earnestly strive to wipe them off in all kinds of ways. And to this end, God hath opened to us many ways. For, 'Tell thou first,' saith He, 'thy sins, that thou mayest be justified.' And again, 'I said I have declared mine iniquity unto Thee, and Thou hast taken away the unrighteousness of my heart"; since a continual self-accusation and remembrance of sins contributes not a little to lessen their magnitude. But there is another more prevailing way than this; to bear malice against none of those who have offended us, to forgive their trespasses to all who have trespassed against us. Would you learn a third? Hear Daniel saying, 'Redeem thy sins by alms-deeds, and thine iniquity by showing mercy to the poor.' And there is another besides this, namely, constancy in prayer and persevering attendance on the intercessions made with God. In like manner fasting brings to us some, and that not small, comfort and release from sins committed, provided it be attended with kindness to others; and it quenches the vehemence of the wrath of God. For water will quench a blazing fire, and by alms-deeds sins are purged away. Let us, then, travel along all these ways; for if we give ourselves wholly to these employments, if we spend our time on them, not only shall we wash off our bygone transgressions, but shall gain very great profit for the future."

Thus salvation by works was Chrysostom's doctrine, and in his nine extant sermons on repentance he elaborates his theory, and never once shows the sinner how his sins may be washed away in the blood of the Divine Saviour. Observe that all his quotations in the above passage, save one, are from the Old Testament and the Apocrypha; and are not even addressed to Christians.

But time forbids me to add to these quotations, which, far from being exceptional, are by no means the worst that could have been produced. I cannot, therefore, more than refer to the downright untruthfulness of Chrysostom, as evinced in the beginning of his tract "On the Priesthood," and of the reincarnations and Buddhism of Origen, together with many other strange doctrines which are to be found in "The Fathers"; and must only add that the result of all their efforts was the establishment of the Catholic and Roman Catholic religion, and that in the tyranny, immorality, and bloody persecutions of Rome, we may see

THE END OF THEIR TEACHING.

There is, however, one point which demands a word. It might be asked, Are we, then, to regard Clement, and Barnabas, and Hermas, and Ambrose, and Chrysostom, as actual Tares—that is to say, as veritable children of the Wicked One? Certainly not; for the Lord has warned us of the mistake to which we shall be liable if we attempt to distinguish the Tares from the Wheat. What we may affirm is, that the doctrine of Christ was set aside by the writings of the Fathers; that there was substituted for it a salvation for which men must turn to a priestly caste, kept up, through the centuries, by successive initiations at the hands of regularly consecrated hierophants called bishops; and that, under the direction of this caste, sacraments, asceticism, virginity, confession, humility, prayer, fasting, and good works, take the place of the sacrifice once offered for sin. This fact proves the presence and influence of the children of the Wicked One in the nominal Church. But whether any of the Fathers are to be reckoned among them, or whether they were simply deceived by them, is known only to God, and will not be revealed until the great harvest, which is the end of the age.

Perhaps, I should further mention that in this address, nominal Christians have been divided into three classes, Evangelicals, Catholics, and Roman Catholics. By the first of these terms I understand those who follow the Apostles and the New Testament; but I would by no means use the second in such a sense. The very name Catholic, which signifies "pervading the whole," betrays the false Church. For the New Testament plainly declares that the real body of Christ will be but a little flock, an insignificant company, during the present age. To call it, therefore, by a name which indicates that it has spread mightily throughout the whole earth is to deny the words of the Lord. Everything really Catholic in these times must belong to Satan; for he is the prince of the world, and must remain so until the true King appears. Let us, then, leave this term to the followers of the Fathers who invented it; and understand it to signify nominal Christians, who believe in a visible united Church that shall presently dominate the world; and who profess the unscriptural tenets which I have been endeavouring to expose.

Lastly, between Catholics and Roman Catholics it is difficult to draw a distinction, save in the fact that the latter acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope; and this difference, important as it may be in its political aspect, is of scarcely any moment at all from a spiritual point of view. For Ritualist and Papist agree in denying the simplicity of the Gospel, and in thrusting the false Church, with her priesthood and her rites, into the place of the Saviour, Jesus Christ our Lord. Finally, we must not neglect

THE PRACTICAL BEARING OF OUR SUBJECT.

In the Apocalyptic epistles, we find a second mention of the pretended Jews, who are the synagogue of Satan, in the message to Philadelphia. Now, in its prophetic interpretation, Philadelphia answers to the nineteenth century. Hence, the allusion to these ancient foes warns us that they must reappear in our own days; that even now there are children of the Wicked One in the nominal Church moving it once again to those errors by which it was changed into an assembly of Satan in the days of old.

And do we not see the effects of their influence on every side? Have not the mitre, the crozier, and the cope, returned to the English Church? Are not the altars again crowned with cross, and candlesticks, and flowers? Is not the land filled with sacrificing priests holding all the tenets of Rome, save, perhaps, the Papal supremacy? Are not many even contemplating re-union with Rome: is not the matter a common subject of discussion?

What, then, does all this mean? That the time is near at hand when the Harlot shall recover her seat upon the Beast; when Rome shall again, though only for a little season, be the Mistress of Christendom, and once more become drunken with the blood of the saints.

But, dear friends, what more does it mean? In the Epistle to the Philadelphian church, it is intimated that the synagogue of Satan will exalt itself above the members of the true Church. And how does the Lord propose to resolve the dispute? He will at last break his long silence, and will Himself signify to the synagogue of Satan which are his beloved. Suddenly, as unexpectedly as the lightning flashes from a summer sky, He will summon his chosen ones into his presence, and so shall they be ever with the Lord.

Yes, the re-appearance of the ancient apostasy, the evil times in which we live, the wonderful events which are taking place in regard to the Jews, the general condition of the world, all testify to one great truth—the Lord is at hand!

Oh, how sweet to turn from the horrors of deception, and corruption, and rebellion, and ruin, and death, to the thought that He is coming, who will save us from them all, who will deliver us from this present evil age, and who, after He has destroyed the corrupters, will even restore the groaning earth to peace and joy.

DROUGHT IN AUSTRALIA.

PRAYER FOR RAIN ANSWERED.

A FRIEND residing at Glen Innes, N.S.W., writing to his relatives in this country on Oct. 7, says:—

I am thankful to say that the drought has broken up at last. The dry weather has played fearful havoc. New England has suffered least of all; still the losses here among sheep, cattle, and horses has been very serious. A neighbour of mine who had fifty head of cattle now has nine; the others have perished from want of grass and water. The creeks are lined with dead cattle and sheep; the unfortunate brutes, weak from want of grass, get bogged while drinking, and, unable to get out, soon perish. Feeding was impossible, as feed could not be bought except at famine prices, and few people had money sufficient to buy food to keep a few alive. Miles and miles of country have been burned as black as possible, nothing escaping the onward march of the flames, and high winds have prevailed without stoppage for the past three weeks. It is estimated that the colony has lost twenty million sheep; cattle in an unknown quantity as yet. As far as I am personally concerned I have been fortunate. I kept what hay and ensilage I had, with a view to selling later when prices would advance, but I have been forced to feed it all away to stock. I keep nine horses here, and have not lost one. I have lost two good cows and three young ones; the rest are all right.

Sunday last, by order of the acting Governor-General, was set apart as a day of prayer for rain. According to the astronomers, there was not a cloud to be seen in any of the Australian colonies, and no rain had fallen for months. In twenty-four hours rain was falling all over the colonies, and during the last week we have had over three inches. What a change! Everyone has a smile now; grass is growing fast, and in another three weeks there will be full and plenty. Sunday next is thanksgiving day for the late rains. People were beginning to think there would be no harvest this year; but there is every prospect of an abundant harvest, thank God.

A PRESBYTERIAN CONVENTION.

(Concluded from last week.)

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

There was a very large attendance of Christian workers on Friday afternoon, the audience almost filling Regent-square Church. Rev. Andrew Murray's address was founded on John xv. 5, especially the clause, "ye are the branches." With the Christian worker everything depends upon relation to Christ; if our life is right with Christ, all else will come right. There may be need for instruction, suggestion, help, and training in regard to different parts of work—all that has its value; but in the long run the great essential is to have the life of Christ within us—in other words, to have Christ in us and working through us.

"Ye are the branches"! What a simple thing it is to be a branch! The branch grows out of the tree or the vine, and in the course of time bears fruit. It has no responsibility; it just receives sap, and nourishment, and strength from the strong stem, and the fruit comes in due time, and without effort. If by the Holy Spirit we realise our relationship to Christ, our work, instead of being, as it sometimes is, an anxiety coming between us and Jesus, will be changed into the brightest and most heavenly experience that can be conceived, and become a link drawing us closer to our Lord and Master.

Notice, in the first place, that the life of a branch is a life of absolute dependence. God is everything for us, and is willing to be everything to us. To depend every moment of the day upon God—that is the higher life. The vine does the work, not the branch; "the branch cannot bear fruit of itself." The vine sends its roots out into the soil, and fetches moisture and food, which in the form of sap are conveyed to the branch. Is this not the case also with the Lord Jesus and the believer? When I preach a sermon, address a Bible-class, or reach a poor neglected one, am I to understand that it is Christ who is the worker? Christ wants us to understand that in all our work He is the worker through us by his Holy Spirit. He does not give us a supply of his Spirit to last for a given period; but, like the sap in the vine, moment by moment He meets our needs. What is wanting is that we shall abide in Him, knowing nothing and doing nothing of our own power, but allowing his might to use our helplessness.

Secondly, the life of a branch is also a life of deep restfulness. The branch has no care. In like manner, we should rest in Christ, the living Vine. You say, "Will not that make me slothful?" No; no one who rests upon the living Christ can become slothful. Fervent love, urging us to fruitful work, must come from Jesus. The expressions the "love of God shed abroad in our hearts," and "the love of Christ constraineth us" refer to a love coming from God and Christ, and show that we can be made fountains of love which shall impel us to love even the most unloveable. If, like the branch, you will rest in God, you will realise in your work a blessing which words cannot describe.

Thirdly, a branch teaches us the lesson of bearing much fruit. In the course of his parable Christ spoke frequently of fruit—first he said fruit, then more fruit, then again much fruit. We are ordained not only to bear fruit, but to bear much fruit. This is God's own work. The Father is the Husbandman, and has charge of the vineyard. As Paul said: "He that establisheth you in Christ is God." There are in London four millions of people who never go to church, and many who go do not know Christ. The heavenly grapes—grapes of the heavenly Vine—can only be had in London as the children of God have the sap of the heavenly Vine in them, and bring forth fruit; except we are filled with the love of Jesus we cannot bear much fruit. There is a great deal of work, teaching and preaching; but what is wanting is close contact between the workers and Christ. Let us not confound work and fruit. There can be a great deal of work for Christ that is not fruit of the heavenly Vine. Fruit-bearing means that the very life and spirit of the Son of God comes out of your heart.

Fourthly, the life of a branch is a life of close communion. What has a branch to do? It has to abide. And Christ's word to us is—abide, abide, abide; we must abide in the Vine if we are to bear much fruit. You say you have to be occupied with things of time and this world. I know it, but you can have your brain engaged upon these matters, and at the same time your heart can be clinging to Christ and enjoying rest in Him. Close, personal communion with Christ is an absolute necessity for the changed life. Take time to be with Christ; if you want to be happy, holy, fruitful Christians, you must have time with God. The great hindrance to our Christian life is the want of communion with God. If you are not willing to sacrifice time to get alone with Jesus, you cannot enjoy the blessing of unbroken fellowship.

My last thought is that the life of a branch is a life of entire surrender. If I am a branch, I must be utterly given up to the Vine; and entire surrender means that, just as literally as Christ was given up entirely to the Father, so we must be given up to Christ. A faithful slave has neither will nor anxiety of his own. We, likewise, every day, should see how in a restful spirit we can please our Father. Give yourselves utterly to Jesus, and ask Him to keep you from sin. Remember the other clause of the text, "I am the Vine." That is the blessing. You cannot trust Christ too much; you cannot ask Him too much, nor expect too much from Him. He says in effect: "I am the Vine, and have taken you to be my branch." Let your hearts sing, "He is my beloved, and I am his."

In prayer, Mr. Murray asked for blessing on the Church of God, and for revival among believers.

THE CLOSING MEETING

on Friday evening was in Exeter Hall, which was quite filled with a deeply interested company. Dr. Monro Gibson, who presided, read Phil. iii., and Rev. Andrew Allan, of Hull, offered prayer. In a few opening words the chairman said the desire of the friends who had attended the Convention must now be, that the fire of devotion to the Lord which had been kindled in their hearts, should spread all around. An impressive address followed from Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor on the two kinds of lives that are led by Christians—one typified by Peter's walking safely on the water with the eye kept on the Master, and the other denoted by the same Peter sinking into distress and danger when the eye of faith was diverted to his surroundings.

ALL FOR CHRIST

was the theme of Mr. Murray's closing word of exhortation, based on Phil. iii. 8. "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord," etc. What a blessed thing it would be, he said, if all present were really to say with the Apostle, "All for Christ," and were to take that as the motto of their lives. In expanding the thought of his address, he said the first point to note is that all must be given up for Christ. By giving up all, we mean all that is of the world—position, possessions, etc.; and all that is of self—self-righteousness, self-strength, self-wisdom—everything that would take the place which Christ ought to occupy. Christ, as our King and our God, demands our all, and He can ask for nothing less. If we really love Him we shall offer nothing less. Love delights to give; it is its nature to be ever giving. Christ's love led Him to give all—even to his life-blood for those whom He came to redeem. So we must give to Him without grudging and without stint. Men may call it sacrifice, but true love regards it as a deep joy to give up everything for our Lord Jesus Christ. Not only does Jesus demand and expect all, and love delights to give all, but the world cries for men and women who have done it. The world wants this spirit of devotion and absolute obedience to the Lord. Shall we not honestly say to-night: My blessed Lord shall have my all!

After an intensely earnest call for this full and unreserved surrender, Mr. Murray led the hushed assembly in a consecration prayer, and the Convention was ended.

REVIVAL IN DALRY, EDINBURGH.

A series of evangelistic meetings in Dalry Free Church has been brought to a close. They were conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz. Night after night the church was filled, while hundreds were unable to gain admittance.

The inquiry-room, capable of holding 100 people, was regularly crowded with the anxious and their Christian friends; more than once it overflowed into the church and the vestry. The young, the middle-aged, and the aged were all there. On one night, two people, aged seventy-three and seventy-six, made a profession of their faith; when they gave in their cards the meeting rose, and sang with great heartiness, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

We cannot calculate the amount of good that has been done, but, so far as can be put into figures, between four and five hundred people, exclusive of children, have given in their names. We have heard of others who have decided for the Lord who have not given in their names.

I witnessed scenes during the course of the mission which will never be effaced from my memory. In the inquiry-room there was a crowd of anxious faces, some of them suffused with tears, all fixed eagerly on the speaker as she delivered to them words of life and peace. Around were earnest Christians, young and old, engaged in silent prayer. In the Church, on this side and that, were Christian men dealing with anxious ones. In the vestry there was a young Christian lady—once a pronounced infidel, but who some years ago had been converted through Mrs. Baeyertz—dealing with Jews and Jewesses anxiously seeking the truth; reasoning with them out of their own Scriptures that our Jesus is the promised Messiah they look for. One old missionary said to me more than once, "This is what my wife and I have prayed for for years—a revival in Dalry, and I thank God that He has permitted us to see it." Alexander Aitken,

Minister of Dalry Free Church.

NOTHING IS LOST.

To talk with God—no breath is lost;
Talk on, talk on!
To walk with God—no strength is lost;
Walk on, walk on!
To wait on God—no time is lost;
Wait on, wait on!
To grind the axe—no work is lost;
Grind on, grind on!
The work is quicker, better done,
Not needing half the strength laid on;
Grind on.
Martha stood—but Mary sat;
Martha murmured much at that;
Martha cared—but Mary heard,
Listening to the Master's word,
And the Lord her hoice preferr'd,
Sit on—hear on!
Work without God, is labour lost;
Work on, work on;
Full soon you'll learn it to your cost;
Toil on, toil on!
Little is much when God is in it;
Man's busiest day's not worth God's minute;
Much is little everywhere,
If God the labour do not share;
So work with God, and nothing's lost,
Who works with Him, does best and most,
Work on, work on.

DECEMBER 15.

David and Jonathan.—1 Sam. xx. 32-42.

Golden Text.—Prov. xviii. 24.

The brief incident of which this lesson tells is intended to suggest the whole story of the friendship between David and Jonathan. A man is made or ruined by his friends. In forming friendships, think not of the present enjoyment they yield, but of the influence they will exert upon your character and destiny. Will they corrupt and degrade? or exalt and ennoble?

There is the greater need for care because false friends abound to whom we may give our confidence. They wear the garb and use the words of friends, but they are enemies at heart. By deceitful methods they gain a confidence which they are ready afterwards to betray. Such false friendships David had to meet, (see his words in Psa. lv. 12, 14, and xli. 9). He spoke, not for himself alone, but for his Son and Lord. Such painful experiences make true friendships more valuable. Dread a false friend; but covet earnestly a true one.

The acquaintance between David and Jonathan began when David was sent for to charm away the evil spirit from Saul by his minstrelsy. But it was not until a few years later, when David had accepted the challenge of Goliath, and, in humble dependence upon God, had obtained a victory for his people, that Jonathan saw his noble and beautiful character, and their friendship began (xviii. 1). The difference in rank between them did not hinder Jonathan from seeing and appreciating the noble qualities of David. We do not wonder that even a king's son should count himself honoured in possessing for a friend one so gifted, so brave, so humble, and so godly as David.

Like every true lasting friendship it was based upon mutual affection. "Jonathan loved him as his own soul" (xviii. 1, 3). Friendships that are based upon similarity of disposition, or taste, or pursuit, or upon mere equality of social position, are not worthy of the name. No price can buy friendship.

> As well mere man an angel might beget,
> Love and love only is the loan of love.

"A man that hath friends must shew himself friendly" (see Prov. xvii. 17; xviii. 24). David's touching lament over the death of Jonathan recalled this as the prominent fact in their acquaintance (2 Sam. i. 26). It is this feature that makes their friendship a picture of that between Jesus and his people.

The utter unselfishness of this friendship appears in this lesson. David had become an object of envy and jealousy and hatred to Saul. Yet Jonathan, as heir by right of succession, had much more reason for desiring to get rid of David. Yet the more Saul hated him, the stronger became Jonathan's love for him. At last Saul's hatred has driven him to find refuge with Samuel (xix. 18); but Saul has discovered him there, so that he cannot remain longer in safety. Jonathan's friendship is now put to the test. Tell the story of the feast in connection with the new moon (Num. x. 10); of David being missed by Saul, and excused by Jonathan; of Saul's anger and his avowed determination to kill David; and of his attempt even to kill Jonathan because of his defence of David (24-14). It was a pitiable exhibition of ungovernable rage on the part of Saul, and throws into greater contrast the beauty and strength of Jonathan's love for his friend. Remember how many instances history furnishes of men violating tenderest relationships, steeling the heart into hardness against the innocence of youth, or the weakness of age, perpetrating the darkest deeds of wickedness in order to get rid of a rival to a crown. Yet even such friendship cannot compare with his "who gave Himself for us."

The unchanging character of this friendship gives it value. It was no mere impulse lasting only while David was popular with all; or expressing itself in a brief determination to befriend him in the hour of danger. But when the circumstances changed the love remained the same. David is about to become an outlaw, but Jonathan's parting with him is a beautiful exhibition of overmastering affection. Still later, when David is in great distress through the treachery of the Keilites, who are eager to betray him into the hands of Saul, Jonathan leaves his father's camp, meets David in the wood, that he may "strengthen his hand in God" (xxiii. 16). Such is the unchanging friendship of Jesus. "Doctor," said a patient, "What shall I do? My friends are all out of town." "You may have one Friend," was the reply, "who is never out of the way, but ever near, and ever true" (John xiii. 1).

The influence of such a friendship is illustrated in the life of David. How it sustained and encouraged him! How it strengthened his faith in God, and his determination not to gain the promised crown by doing wrong! Twice Saul was in his power, and twice he was kept from doing him hurt (see xxiv. and xxvi). The question of all questions to each of us is, can we say of Jesus, "This is my Friend!"

For the Young.

FATHER WANG.

I want to tell you about Wang Tu ic, or Father Wang, as you would say in English. I have known him six years. He sits from morning to night outside his shop mending clothes. His hair is white, and his back is very bent; he wears large spectacles and bends low over his work. He never looks up unless spoken to, he is so busy. When evening comes on, he gathers the clothes that have hung all day outside to attract customers, folds them neatly up, and puts up the shutters.

I have often watched him do this, for he lives next door to me, and I am always interested in the way he does it. He appears as interested, as active, and full of energy as though he had but that day commenced the business of clothes-selling and clothes-mending. After the shop is shut up Father Wang brings out a handful of burning incense sticks. Holding the ends of these in both hands, and standing with his back to the house, he makes three low bows. Is he bowing to the city wall which faces our houses? Oh no! He is bowing to heaven and earth. He knows of nothing better than heaven and earth, and therefore he worships them. They are to him instead of God. After thus acknowledging heaven and earth, the incense sticks are placed in a little receptacle specially made for them and fixed on the front of the shop. There they continue to burn for some time. Poor Wang Tu ic! I think if you saw him you would say, "dear old man." Yes, he is a most gentle, inoffensive, quiet, good old man.

But now I shall tell you some of his troubles, for his troubles are really the cause of my writing this letter to you. Many years ago Mr. Wang's wife died. But he had two sons whom he loved very dearly. I remember when the elder son was married, the joy there was when the new bride came home to live with her husband and father-in-law. My servant was invited to the wedding feast, and there was great rejoicing among the neighbours. This was about four years ago. Things went on very happily for a time till this elder son got very weak and ill. His wife was very good to him, and waited on him night and day. But he got worse and worse, and one morning when we heard a loud cry of bitter grief and then a sudden stillness we knew that Wang Tu ic's elder son was dead. We felt very sorry for the family, but our sympathy was not of much use, I fear, for they do not believe in our dear Lord, and therefore the consolation we could offer was not understood,

Wang Tu ic's second son is a prodigal boy. Instead of helping his old father in the business, he is idle and squanders away all the money he can find. Sometimes he goes away for weeks together and then returns to live on his poor old father. A year ago thieves broke into the Wangs' house and stole a quantity of their goods. This was such a loss to them, that I asked the other missionaries in this town kindly to help them. So they did, and I had the pleasure of handing a thousand cash (about three shillings) to the old man. I think this cheered him for a time, and it also proved that we like to be kind to all, and not only to those who profess interest in our teaching.

But poor old Wang Tu ic's troubles were not at an end. His second son continued to be a trouble to his father. The business was not very good, and rice dear. Still the old man went perseveringly on, steadily plodding away at mending clothes; and his daughter-in-law helping all she could. Certainly both father-in-law and daughter-in-law are patterns of industry.

Last week, while quietly sitting in my little garden, I heard a tumult in the front of the house, and a woman came rushing in to tell me that Father Wang was throwing himself into the river because he had just lost a large bundle of clothes. So I went out and found the poor old man in his shop, his head bowed down upon his knees in great sorrow. (A neighbour had saved him from the river.) I exhorted him not to give way to grief, but to pray to the true God, who would certainly help him.

He had but just returned from Chen-tu, the large city, forty miles away, where he had bought the large bundle of clothes, and hoped to profit by re-selling them. While the daughter-in-law was preparing the dinner a thief stepped into the shop and took off the bundle. My heart really ached for him, for I saw his grief was very great.

Later in the day I sent an old Christian man to speak to him, and to invite him to tea. So he came, and listened for the first time in his life to the sweet story of the Prodigal Son. I feel sure God looks pityingly on this man. Yet he does not know God. From time to time he has heard the glad tidings of the love of God, and of the Saviour, but he does not understand, and is quite indifferent to it. He probably regards God's message as a foreign religion. He is like many millions of his fellow-countrymen; they do not believe God's message is true. But though this man's heart is so hard and dull, God can soften it, and open it so that he will receive the Gospel. Will you pray for him?

AMONG WOMEN IN TRAVANCORE.

Rev. J. W. Gillies (L.M.S.), writing from Quilon, Travancore, South India, speaks of much blessing resulting from the work of the Mission Biblewoman. Sabbath afternoon prayer-meetings have been started in the homes of the women, a concession full of significance and promise. The Scriptures are being circulated with diligence, and they are taking hold of those who read them.

We make a brief extract from a recent report of the Biblewoman:—"At one heathen house I was requested to teach the inmates to read, so that they might be able to read the Bible. I taught them, and now they take great interest in the Book. In another house I prayed with a sick man, who asked me to visit him often.

"While I was speaking to a party of women, one of them said, 'Why is it that the missionaries spend so much money in this country?' Another replied, 'It is because they wish every one to know of their God.' We have no free access to the Mohammedan houses; but sometimes the women allow us in when their husbands are away. Once while I was speaking to a Mohammedan woman, her husband came, and asked me some questions about the Bible. After answering him, I said: 'He that knoweth he is a sinner, requireth a Saviour; but he that thinketh not that he is a sinner, does not realise the fact that he requires a Saviour. Therefore, you will first have to understand that you are a sinner, and then you will known the necessity of having a Saviour.' At last the man told me I could continue to speak to his wife as I pleased.

"At another place the people said, 'We like to see and hear you again and again. What you say is good. It is not an easy thing for us to become Christians; but we wish our children to learn good things.' When I went to a Roman Catholic house the people were not much pleased, and I asked them their reason for being so. They replied, 'If our priests were to hear that we are listening to what you read from your Bible, they would expel us from the community.' I reminded them of the words of Christ: 'Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out,' and asked why they feared men who could do them no harm."

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

[In our issue of Nov. 21 the homily on Num. xii. was accidentally omitted, thus throwing the Notes one day in advance of the Bible and Prayer Union reading. This mistake is rectified in the present issue.]

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 8.

"The Angel of the Lord...for an adversary against him."—Num. xxii. 22.

The Angel of Jehovah is often referred to as a very present help, and as encamping round about those that fear God, but here, as an adversary with a drawn sword. When we serve God his sword is for us, as for Joshua at Jericho; but when we turn as here from his way to our crooked paths, it is drawn against us. That which seems to be full of menace is, when we look deeper, an angel force seeking to stay our further progress toward destruction.

Look for the Angel with his drawn sword in every pain of body, anxiety of circumstance, or suffering of mind. You were intent on pursuing your own way, and obtaining the rewards of unrighteousness, when suddenly you were stayed in your course. Another step would have brought you to the edge of the precipice, but you were suddenly arrested by that which forbade advance. Do not curse the hindering obstacle. Beneath it is God's gentlest angel, endeavouring to turn you from your evil purpose.

Too often our eyes are holden. We fret and chafe against God's kindest providence. Our anger is kindled at the ass which sees the angel, and thrusts herself against the wall. Let this day be one of humble searching of heart. Try to learn the reason why God has frustrated your plans, and blocked your progress. Ask for the opened eyes. Be sure that there is mercy in every broken plan. Bow your head. Fall on your face, and bless Him whose kindliest angels assume this roughest disguise.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 9.

"He hath blessed, and I cannot reverse it."—Num. xxiii. 20.

Balaam would have reversed the blessing into a curse, had he been able. Large rewards were depending on his doing so. But he was restrained. The current of blessing was running too strong for him to stem: the music was too overpowering for him to alter the air. Is not this also the despair of Satan? God hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus, and he cannot reverse them.

The blessing of adoption.—When the soul believes in Jesus, it is adopted into the family of God, the new life begins to throb within, it is constituted an heir of God, a joint-heir with Christ (John i. 12). This position is irreversible. We may be tempted and overthrown, we may even go for a season into the far country, we may bring the family-name into contempt, but Satan cannot untie the knot with which God has bound us to Himself.

The blessing of acceptance in the Beloved.—We are in Him, chosen in Him before the foundation of the world, risen and ascended and seated in Him in the heavenlies; and as our God views us in Jesus, He cannot behold iniquity or see perverseness in Him, and He accepts and blesses us as his well-beloved. This, too, is irreversible by the arts and machinations of the great Accuser.

The blessing of the Covenant.—God has taken us to be a people for his own possession. His name is named on us, his character is implicated in our ultimate deliverance from evil, and glorification. If we could be cast away, He would suffer irreparable dishonour. Therefore, though Satan do his utmost to discredit us, as he did the patriarch Job, he cannot reverse the covenant in which God and we are for ever and indissolubly joined.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 10.

"The Spirit of God came upon him."—Num. xxiv. 2.

This is a solemn warning for us all. Balaam saw truly, but he perished miserably. He heard the words of God, and saw the vision of the Almighty, but because he loved the wages of unrighteousness, and taught Balak to cast the stumbling-block of licentiousness before the children of Israel, he was slain in battle by the people whom he had blessed. He wished to die the death of the righteous, but was overtaken in that of the apostate. How near we may come to the gates of salvation, and yet perish miserably without.

Distinguish between Unction and Union.—Hooper, the greatest of English divines, says: "We are not to confuse the grace of union with the grace of unction." It is possible to be united to the Lord Jesus in regeneration, without receiving the enduement of the Holy Spirit for service; and it is possible, like Saul, to be anointed for high office without being truly regenerate. Official position may be worthily filled, and yet the heart be all awry.

Distinguish between Gift and Grace.—We may be able to speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have the gift of prayer, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and yet be without love. The most gifted souls are by no means the most gracious. Desire earnestly the greater gifts, if you will, but be very sure that your heart is established with grace.

Distinguish between Vision and Realisation.—To see the fair land from afar, as Balaam did, is not enough; we must place our foot down on its soil, and go into it to possess. It is not enough to have an intellectual appreciation of the blessed life and the way to enter it, not enough to extol or proclaim it. We must make it ours by humility and faith.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11.

"Israel joined himself unto Baal-Peor."—Num. xxv. 3.

R.V.Marg. gives the alternative, yoked. The people were attracted by the charms of the women of Moab, but what they entered for pleasure, became clasped on them as a yoke. "He that committeth sin is the servant of sin."

Sin is slavery.—The drunkard loathes his chains, vows not to yield again, but sinks deeper into the mire with every ineffectual struggle. The libertine is bound with passions, his heart is a dungeon, his conscience a scourge. We are promised pleasure and gratification, but when once the syrens have prevailed and got us in their power, they cast off their disguise, and work their horrid will.

The only deliverance is through the Anointed Priest.—Phinehas interposed, and he was Aaron's grandson, on whom the anointing oil rested. And this illustrates a remarkable expression in Isaiah x. 27, "The yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing." Is not that the anointing of the Holy Ghost? It is only through the Holy Spirit that we can be made free with the freedom of the Son of God. Where He is there is liberty. Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh.

We must die to the sin that enchained us.—There could be no half-measures. Phinehas took a spear. Whatever the cursed thing is which has crept in to enslave, it must be slain before the Lord. Is there some secret evil in your soul, eating out its strength? Ask the Faithful High Priest to deal with it, that your soul may cast off its bondage, and rise into the liberty of the sons of God.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12.

"There was not left a man of them."—Num. xxvi. 65.

Twice Moses numbered the people: on the first occasion Aaron was his colleague, at the beginning of the forty years; on the second occasion Eleazar, and this was at the end of the wanderings, on the threshold of Canaan. But only two had survived, Joshua and Caleb, because only they followed the Lord. God deals with a nation by dealing with individuals. He misses no one.

His love misses none.—The little sick child put her hand outside the coverlet before falling asleep, in the hope that the Good Shepherd would notice it, and not miss her, as He passed down the hospital ward. But there is no need to fear his missing us, whose eyes are like a flame of fire, bringing the light with which they see. He tasted death for every man; He seeks each missing sheep, each lost coin. "He loved me, and gave Himself for me."

His Spirit misses none.—If thou hast faith as a grain of mustard seed, it will attract his notice. If thou yieldest thyself to his Spirit, though thy lung be weak and diseased, He will fill it. If thou desirest to be endued with the gift of Pentecost, it will fall upon thy head, though thou art as obscure as the shepherd-psalmist of old.

Death and Judgment miss none.—On each of these unbelieving men the Divine sentence was executed. One or two might linger, as autumn leaves on the topmost boughs of stripped trees, but ultimately they shared the fate of their companions. Unless Christ come first, our turn will come. In Adam all die. We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ. Each was born alone, must die alone, and alone give an account to the King. "Prepare, my soul, to meet Him."

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 13.

"At his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in."—Num. xxvii. 21.

The emphasis is on the word his. Moses had asked God to indicate a successor to lead out and bring in the people. But Jehovah drew a distinction. Joshua was to receive the Divine diretion from Eleazar, the priest, who should inquire of the Lord, and at his word, i.e., God's word through Eleazar, the people were to go out and come in.

Our goings-out should be determined by the Word of God.—We never waste time when we stand before the true Priest, who has the Urim of Divine direction, especially when we are considering some call to duty. Very often we have gone out at the instigation of pride, or emulation, or fussy activity; we have gone out because others have done so, and we were eager not to be left behind. Under these circumstances the out-goings of our mornings have not been made to rejoice, we have encountered disappointment and defeat. When we go forth at God's bidding, He becomes absolutely responsible; otherwise we pierce ourselves through with many sorrows, and bring discredit on the cause we would fain serve.

Our comings-in must be determined by the Word of God.—When we should come in to rest, to pray, to fill again our souls with his Spirit, to suffer in secret, or to die, must be left to the determination of his will. It is easier to go out than to come in. Activity is pleasanter than passivity, stirring strife than lying still to suffer. But our times are in his hand, and as soon as we recognise the decisions of the Urim in the appointments of Divine Providence, the speedier shall we be at peace.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14.

"My food."—Num. xxviii. 2.

God speaks as though He fed, through the sacrificial flame, on the offerings of his people. There can be no doubt that the obedience of the blessed Lord to the death of the cross was very satisfying to the hunger of the Father's heart (Eph. v. 2), and there is a sense in which our prayers and praises, the offering of ourselves in consecration, the gifts we lay before Him, are, when laid upon the altar, Christ, very pleasing to God. They are his food (Heb. xiii. 15, 16).

We often speak of ourselves as hungering for God. Do we sufficiently realise that He hungers for our love, our whole-hearted devotion, our fellowship with Him? It often acts as an incentive to prayer to reflect that we may be passing from our chamber in the morning leaving God's desire unsatisfied. He was longing for the uplifting of our soul in devotion and praise which was not forthcoming. Still, as of old, in the morning the hungry Lord comes to seek fruit on his trees. Too often there is nothing but leaves. Too unseldom he cries, "I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey."

If we really loved Jesus, we should be glad for Him to be satisfied, though we were not primarily concerned in satisfying Him. It were enough for us to know that his hunger was feeding on the love of saints, or on the salvation of new converts, though we were not the medium of the one or the other. Oh, for this unselfish love for Jesus, which looks at things from his standpoint, altogether irrespective of ourselves!

THE LATE

Mrs. Elizabeth L. Comstock.

The subject of our sketch has been called "the modern Mrs. Fry," and it is significant to find that in her ninth year she heard "that eminent servant of the Lord, Elizabeth Fry," speak at London Yearly Meeting. "I shall never forget the impression she made upon my mind . . . as she spoke of the prisoners, and the suffering, and the outcast . . . my heart was lifted in the prayer that I might grow as good as she was and work in the same way." These early prayers were in later years abundantly answered.

Elizabeth L. Rous (afterwards Mrs. Comstock) was born in Maidenhead in 1815. Her parents, belonging to the Society of Friends, sent her to the Friends' School at Islington. Later on she became a teacher in Croydon, and afterwards at Ackworth. In 1847 she was married to Leslie Wright, of Walthamstow, who died two years after, leaving her with an infant daughter.

In 1854, after deep spiritual experience, she was led to emigrate to Canada, settling for a time at Belleville, where she first felt it her duty to speak at meeting, and being acceptable, was recorded as a minister. Her letters at this time give delightful glimpses of the simple home life of the Friends in Canada.

In 1858 she removed to the United States, on her marriage to John T. Comstock, of Rollin, Michigan, and here she was led out in public service in many ways; not only in the Yearly Meetings, but also in prisons, asylums, and poor-houses. "In common with many other members of the Society of Friends, she felt a deep interest in the condition of the coloured population, and was able to aid, in some cases, the escape of fugitives to the land of freedom." In fact, she had a part in the working of what became known as the "Underground Railway," whereby large numbers of hunted fugitives were enabled to escape. Vivid descriptions of such cases are given in her Life and Letters,* from which our information is drawn.

The civil war, which broke out in 1861, arrested her attention, and aroused her sympathy for the poor wounded, suffering, dying soldiers. At that time Mrs. Comstock had already begun her fruitful labours in the State prisons, but as the war news became more serious, she felt called to the hospitals in Virginia, where she witnessed terrible sufferings, which she describes in her letters in vivid terms. Devoting herself to the care of these "dying boys," she went about "with a mother's soothing touch," ever seeking to breathe the name of Jesus, to minister the comforts of Divine grace to the dying. The incidents recorded in her letters are of the most touching nature; the pain and agony are graphically described, but deeper still is the great pity over the souls perishing on every hand. It soon became abundantly evident that her work in this way was being greatly blessed, and full permission was granted her to visit all hospitals and camps, as well as reformatory and prison institutions.

In the camps of the "rebel prisoners" she also found large opportunities of Gospel service. Indeed, the chapters describing her labours with a few like-minded women among soldiers, rebel prisoners, and contrabands read like a "boy's book of adventures," so full are they of hair-breadth escapes and exciting encounters; but through all they were safely carried by Him whom they calmly trusted, and in whose strength they sought to serve.

After the war prison work seems to have engrossed her attention for years, and the incidents recorded show that many hearts were reached and many who had broken their country's laws won to the Saviour.

In 1873-4 came a visit to England, full of busy ministry, not only in public testimony, but also in personal labour. Returning to the States in 1875, she resumed her prison and reformatory work. A few years later the condition of things in Kansas attracted attention. The coloured freedmen of the South were in many instances barbarously treated, and this led to an extensive emigration to the new State of Kansas, where they arrived, for the most part, in a destitute condition. The matter was taken up vigorously by the Friends and others, and help was secured from far and near on behalf of "The Exodusters." Under her ceaseless labours among these refugees her health broke down. After a year's rest she came to England for complete change. Soon after returning to her home in Michigan her beloved husband died, and with her daughter she settled at Union Springs, N.Y. A few years of quiet, useful ministry, and then she peacefully fell asleep on August 2, 1891, after a life of faithful and fruitful service, under varied circumstances, among the oppressed, the suffering, the poor, and the criminal, but ever in the love of God for salvation of souls and the reclamation of the lost.

Her Life and Letters, to which we have already referred, are intensely interesting, affording an insight into a busy life and various lines of service of which but little generally is known. We close with a stanza she loved:—

There is work in the crowded street,
There is work in the silent cell;
'Midst the noisiest hum, and the busiest feet,
In halls where thronging multitudes meet,
In the hovel where outcasts dwell.
Stay not to choose your path,
Shrink not from heat or cold;
There nourish the seed by prayer and faith,
You will gather a hundred-fold!

RECOLLECTIONS OF MR. RADCLIFFE.

AT WORK IN EAST LONDON.*

Mr. Radcliffe had the privilege of staying during some of his visits to London under the roof of the late beloved Dowager Lady Rowley, and I think I may say that no evenings were more prized by herself than those when she gathered together a band of Christians to meet him for praise and prayer on his going forth or returning from any of his evangelistic labours.

In the beginning of 1861, Mr. Radcliffe called a meeting for prayer and conference. For many successive Sundays he had told the message of God's love in the City of London Theatre, and when he felt the Lord called him elsewhere, he thus wrote to Lady Rowley:—

"Now the poor East of London! Do not let West neglect it. The Lord be praised for all that you and Miss Lowe are doing for it; but, oh, how it is neglected! It does so much want more buildings — of these there are enough deserted, but more living, loving labourers."

And there came a band from the West whose hearts the Lord had touched; not men only, but ladies, some of whom had never before frequented such places, stepped out of luxury and comfort into the courts and alleys of the East-end.

Can I ever forget the thrill that went through me when I heard of Clara M. S. Lowe, daughter of Sir Hudson Lowe, who guarded Napoleon in St. Helena, taking a little fold-up bed and all she needed, in a hired cab from Hyde Park-square, and driving to the East-end to live amongst the outcasts.

She was an officer's daughter, but she then became a pioneer for the "King of Kings." She lives still, and all these years she has been living for others. Many a fallen one she has reclaimed. By many a death-bed she has stood. From dark corners and caves come some of the rarest gems, and so the dear Lord has his precious ones even in the attics of the East of London.

The visits to the East of London were sometimes of special interest. In K—— Street a large party of us were visiting a thieves' lodging-house. We had to pass in through a drinking bar. The manager stopped us and said, "I would like to count the party just to know that you all come out again." When we passed in we found a long low-roofed room, with several fire-places at which the men and women were cooking savoury dishes. A missionary who was with us said, "A lady has come to speak to you." The thieves all came forward en masse and looked at me. I was rather taken aback and said, "Oh, we have only come to shake hands and wish you well." What a hearty hand-shaking there was, and a kind welcome even from these outcasts of society. Loving words were said to them about Jesus, and we all parted, I believe, loving one another, and no one was missing.

One night, after meeting friends in Wentworth-street, Mr. Radcliffe went off rather dispirited to his meeting in the City of London Theatre, as he thought he had not seen such blessing as he expected. After preaching there he said it would be encouraging to faith if any one then present who had found the Saviour at these services would come "behind the scenes." One rose, then another, then a third, until from sixty to eighty people rose, and after prayer Mr. Radcliffe returned to the stage, the new converts following him. It was such a scene. The old believers, like the Jews in Nehemiah's day, were some weeping and some laughing for joy.

London Poverty.

3.—Scenes in Central London.

The condition of things in Central London is quite as bad as farther east. Round Field-lane, from Saffron-hill to Gray's Inn-road and Mount Pleasant, there is a mass of pitiful poverty; while in the teeming district between Strand and Holborn, extending from the Law Courts to Soho, misery and want are widespread. One worker of large experience declares emphatically that the distress this winter seems likely to be worse than ever—that is among the lower labouring, odd-jobbing, and casual classes.

It is impossible to describe all the sorrowful homes I have visited during the past few weeks. In making a selection, let it be borne in mind these are but representative of many such.

The unemployed are well-nigh everywhere—there are, in fact, few houses in which some of the families are not suffering in this way. For example, in a gloomy "model" dwelling in Drury-lane it seemed in going from door to door as if the majority were "out-of-works." In the basement—dark cellar might be a more fitting term—we find a woman with six children. The father, a cab-washer, is idle, the mother seems to have lost heart entirely. The one gleam of light is that Jack, the eldest boy, is "a good boy" and brings home what he can earn by minding a street stall. For their two tiny dark rooms they pay 5s. 6d. a week rent.

Next door we find seven children—noisy enough, in all their rags and grime. As our eyes become used to the gloom, we discern someone on the heap in the corner. It proves to be the father, a coster, at home ill. The mother is out trying to earn a few coppers; and the children and sick father are doing the best they can—fireless and foodless—till she returns. My guide, one of Mr. Wheatley's workers, gladdens the heart of the little ones by a ticket for food and coals, from the relief fund of the St. Giles Christian Mission.

A few streets further on we reach a clean, but nearly empty room, in which a poor pale young woman is nursing her infant of ten days old. When the worker found her a few days ago (through a neighbour's kindness) this young wife was without a crust, and seemed fainting for food, while the babe was like to die, its natural nourishment having failed. The visitor's first impulse was to run for milk—which, warming over a neighbour's fire, she administered to the infant, bringing it back to life. Then the mother was attended to. Lately a housemaid, she married a painter. His master failed, he fell out of work, and has been so for many weeks; leading to the things being sold out for rent. In this case, there is no trace of drinking habits—would it were always so.

In an attic in Clare Market I found a one-legged, merry-faced fellow, folding "Old Moore's" almanacks. A carman, he lost his leg by an accident, and since then he keeps house and minds the baby while his wife goes out to a printer's. He makes no complaint, rather rejoices that though he has lost his leg he has found the Lord; but the visitor quickly finds out the sore want they are enduring so quietly.

A little way off in a narrow court off the Strand, and hard by Exeter Hall, we find "Darby and Joan," an aged and fond couple (she 85 and he 73) in a room, apparently at one time a box cupboard. The old bed seemed to fill it all, leaving space only to squeeze past between the fireplace and door. For this they pay 2s. weekly rent. As they have 2s. 6d. parish relief they exist on the 6d.—save when the Lord (they are bright Christians) sends some help. They dread to fall behind (whatever they may suffer), for "who would take old folks like us in?" Years ago they had a good business; but reverses came; then the husband, working at an unaccustomed calling, broke his leg, and his health gave way. They are helpless now, but so far as I have seen (and I have dropped in on them twice since introduced to them) very happy in the Lord.

As to widows, about whom Lord Radstock wrote lately so touchingly, I found them everywhere, from one in Betterton-street, with sixteen children, to another, "alone in the world," dying of cancer, but still supporting herself by fancy box-making.

Amongst these—unemployed, sick, widows, and aged poor, and hosts of hungry children—the St. Giles Christian Mission is carrying on constant and kindly service; going from house to house, finding out those in need, and ministering as far as possible to their necessities. There are such loving helpers in all parts of London; but they ought to be more generously supported.

BELLEVILLE MISSION, PARIS.

The winter's work having been resumed, friends at home will be interested in hearing some particulars of the past months. During the summer the meetings were well kept up, four Gospel services every week and a temperance meeting once a month. The Sunday and Thursday schools, small during the summer, are now steadily increasing.

Miss de Broen has lent the reading-room at 205, Rue St. Honoré, to the Danish Association, who hold night schools there twice a week, with occasional lectures. The Swedish Y.W.C.A., under the presidency of the excellent Swedish pastor and his wife, meet under the same friendly roof. Miss de Broen's earnest desire that this office may become more and more a centre of Christian work and fellowship has, in some measure, been realised this season, when many of God's children have, as they expressed it, found there a home. Coming into personal contact with Miss de Broen and her different workers has helped to draw out much sympathy for the Lord's servant in her work.

The financial burden is pressing sorely on her, but the Lord who has sustained her for nearly twenty-five years in Belleville, will surely supply the need and make some of his children the channels of help. The Spirit of the living God is among us; workers from many parts of the Lord's vineyard have gone away encouraged, and links have been formed uniting us to many in India, Africa, America, Sweden, and Spain, who are publishing the glad tidings, looking for the Lord's return.

On All Saints' Day the usual crowds repaired to the cemeteries, and Miss de Broen and her helpers took part in distributing many leaflets and tracts; she also seized the opportunity afforded by M. Pasteur's funeral, to give Gospels and tracts among the military escort, soldiers and officers also holding out their hands and receiving gladly as many as could be offered to them. Mary L. Douglas.

POOR BOYS AND GIRLS, GUILDFORD.—The report of this Mission shows good work among waifs and strays unreached by the Sunday-school. Mr. Macdonald, the superintendent, has been a worker among such neglected children for fifty years, and was a co-worker with Dr. Guthrie. Although disappointment is often experienced, many instances are given of glorious results. Communications should be addressed, The Mission House, Commercial-road, Guildford.

CONVENTION AT BOSCOMBE.

Very large companies gathered at the meetings of this Convention, held from Nov. 26 to 28. General the Hon. B. M. Ward presided. The speakers were Revs. J. A. Bevan, of Hampstead; J. B. Figgis, of Brighton; E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon; and F. S. Webster, of Birmingham; and Dr. White, of Winchester.

A specially interesting feature of the Convention were the afternoon Bible-readings. On Thursday Dr. White traced the Bible teaching upon the river of God, and the trees of God. God's river is full of water; God's trees are full of sap, because they are nourished by the unfailing waters of the river. They should not be like the heath—the camel thorn—in the desert, without beauty, without bloom, but possessing sharp thorns. Too many Christians are like that. Conventions come and go, and they are not one whit improved. They do not see when good cometh. The Christian whose trust is in the Lord is ever green and ever fruitful. He does not depend upon surroundings, but has learned the secret of perpetual freshness. "He sees not when heat cometh," and ceases not to bear fruit in the year of drought.

Not less practical were other messages. That by Mr. Webster on Thursday morning on "The walk that pleases God," contained some excellent counsel. Having described what the walk was, he reminded them of three things—(1) There was a delusion to be dispelled, viz., that little sins did not matter. Holiness included everything, secret and open, little and great. (2) A discovery to be made. They had to learn the provision God had prepared for them in Christ. The poor lepers at the gate of Samaria had not to make the provision, but in the extremity of their need they discovered it. God had already made it. So has He in Christ made full provision. (3) A daily habit to be formed—that of dependence upon God in prayer, and in reading his Word.

The Convention has been in every way a success, and has proved that a Convention held in the centre of Bournemouth would be largely blessed to all the churches.

BLACKTHORN-STREET CHAPEL, BOW COMMON, E.

After long waiting, the friends here have opened a house of prayer, erected for the carrying on of church work, so as to set the old chapel free for the development of work amongst children and the poor; and the housing of many established agencies for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom amongst young and old, men and women alike. With a view of reaching the masses living in the immediate neighbourhood, the new building will be known as "The Lighthouse," and there is every reason to believe that this departure will be crowned with eminent success.

A praise and prayer meeting on the evening of November 25 preceded the more formal opening of the following days. On November 26, the afternoon preacher was Rev. Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle. After tea a meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Herbert Marnham. Many friends and supporters were present. A comprehensive statement was given by Pastor Hazzard, on behalf of the building committee, explaining that under the stimulus of two generous gifts (the freehold site on the one hand, and the promise of the last £1000 on the other), the friends resolved to proceed with that part of the scheme, the completion of which would entitle them to this munificent gift. The services were continued on Wednesday and Thursday, the preachers being Revs. John Bradford, F. B. Meyer, B.A., and Dr. Newman Hall. The whole series of meetings were of a very encouraging character.

HASTINGS HOME OF REST.—The Sunday-school Union, a delightful Home of Rest at Hastings for Sunday-school teachers and others, is beautifully situated on the brow of a hill with lovely sea and land views. It is entirely non-sectarian, and lady members of any Christian Church would be gladly welcomed. There must be many busy sisters to whom such a refined home and bright congenial society would be an unspeakable blessing. Inquiries as to terms, etc., may be addressed to Mr. F. Clements, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

The Society for Promoting Female Education IN THE EAST

Has been for many years before the public as one honoured and blessed of God; and, therefore, it presents strong claims upon the sympathy and the liberality of His people. The work carried on by its MISSIONARY LADIES includes and they have TRAINED a goodly array of NATIVE WOMEN as helpers in these various branches of work.

Zenana, Village, and Medical Missions; Home and Hut Visiting; Classes for Women; Orphanages and Schools;

The Sphere of the Society's operations includes China, Japan, India, Persia, Africa, and the Holy Land.

But this Society, with its band of faithful workers and its rich harvest of souls, is not adequately supported. The Committee have had the pain of refusing many applications for labourers; nor is this all. Already they have been compelled to "draw in," instead of extending; and, unless speedy and liberal help be afforded, further reduction will have to be made. Surely "these things ought not so to be." Shall the Committee appeal in vain?

CONTRIBUTIONS will be thankfully received by the Honorary Secretaries, Miss ELLEN RUTT, Fernhurst, Upper Clapton, N.E., and Miss LOUISA HOPE, 7, Ovington-gardens, Brompton, S.W.; by the Secretary, Miss WEBB, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.; and by the Society's Bankers, LLOYDS BANK, LIMITED (HERRIES-FARQUHAR Branch), 16, St. James's-street, S.W.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION

Employs 480 MISSIONARIES, and is in URGENT NEED OF FUNDS.

It is one of the oldest of the Home Missionary Societies, and has ever held fast to its Evangelical Principles. Its work is still pioneering, inter-denominational, and subsidiary to that of the Churches.

Notwithstanding the uprising of other Evangelistic agencies, the need is no less urgent now than formerly for persevering and systematic house-to-house visitation. In addition to 357 Missionaries who give their whole attention to visiting the homes of the people, 123 men are set apart for the visitation of special classes, such as Bakers, Cabmen, Canal Boatmen, Navvies, Omnibusmen, Coachmen, Coalheavers, Foreigners, Gasworkers, the Fire Brigade, Police, Postmen, Railway-men, Scavengers, Soldiers and Sailors; also to the inmates of Hospitals and Workhouses, the Landlords and Customers in Public-houses, and men in the Docks, Common Lodging-houses, Factories, &c., &c. More than half-a-million men were visited, and vast numbers of them personally dealt with during the past year.

The labours of these devoted men have been largely blessed, and the Committee look with confidence to the liberality of Christians of all denominations for their future maintenance, and with the hope that the number may again reach 504.

At present there are 54 districts without any guaranteed support, and 116 districts for which less than £40 was contributed last year.

For every gift of £50 per annum one of the former can be retained, and for sums varying from £5 to £40 per annum the occupation of the partially supported districts can be continued.

If friends are unable to contribute the whole sum necessary to maintain a Missionary, they may perhaps be able to offer £10, £5, or smaller sums. These subscriptions will be grouped for particular districts, and will thus remove the very pressing anxiety of the Committee.

Gifts will be gratefully acknowledged by the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., or by the Secretaries, Rev. T. S. HUTCHINSON, M.A., Rev. ROBERT DAWSON, B.A.—Offices, 3, Bridewell-place, London, E.C.

Society for Relief of Persecuted Jews.

(SYRIAN COLONIZATION FUND.)

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED

FOR EMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF AT JERUSALEM.

Sixty-four Men and Boys are employed at Abraham's Vineyard in stone-dressing, carpentry, building, soap-making, &c. Every morning many more of the starving Jews beg for work, but cannot be taken on because there is not enough money for the wages. Those employed number with their families 228 souls supported by industry.

In July and August 732 souls were relieved by gifts of money for drinking, money most urgently needed in the hot summer season by those who live in underground, dark, airless cellars, or in sheds exposed to the full sunshine. They feel the want of water even more than the want of bread, especially for the sick, aged, and children.

SILENT SUFFERING!

Among the respectable poor under our visitation are some whose pathetic stories of suffering, silently borne, would deeply touch our readers' hearts.

Who will help replace gladness for sadness this Christmas time in many decent but desolate homes? Drunkards are referred to the parish.

Provisions, clothing, and bedding, would be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Director of the North-East London Gospel Mission, Mr. Wm. Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N.

HOMES OF HOPE,

Nos. 4-5-6, Regent-square, Grays Inn-rd., London, E.C.

This Society was established in 1869. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women before they become mothers as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others. The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1.—For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day. 2.—For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would, in many cases, rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week. 3.—For Law Expenses: in every case, if it be possible, the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support. The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent, and the Committee are in great distress for funds.

BAPTISMAL REGENERATION.

In a letter on Christian Union, in our issue of November 21, Mr. C. W. Hawes took exception to some remarks of an earlier correspondent on an address by the Bishop of Lincoln. He sought to identify Sacramentalism with Scripture teaching, and resented the statement that the Bishop's words showed him to be "enshrouded in Popish darkness." We have received a large number of letters in reply to Mr. Hawes, some of them covering a wide field of controversy. We present our readers with a summary of the whole.

Mr. Hawes contended for baptismal regeneration, saying: "If in Holy Baptism we do not become partakers of Christ, and if we are not made members of the Body of Christ, why need we be baptized at all? Or what are the benefits to be derived through baptism?"

Several correspondents point out, in reply, that the New Testament records no instance of baptism being administered (much less blessed) to anyone except as a sequel to professed faith in Christ.

W. H. (23, Sussex-square, Brighton) writes:—"It is by faith that we have pardon (Acts x. 43), peace (Rom. v. 1), the new birth (John i. 12, 13), eternal life (John vi. 47), the Holy Spirit (Eph. i. 13, R.V.). What a sad mistake it would be to confound the sign with the thing signified, to make the reality depend on the figure rather than the reverse, and to attribute to baptism in water effects which baptism in the Spirit alone can give! Yet this is what Mr. Hawes does. 'We become,' he maintains, 'members of Christ's body by baptism,' whereas in 1 Cor. xii. 13 (R.V.) we read: 'In one Spirit were we all baptized into one body.' When thus baptized in the Spirit (compare Acts x. 47; xi. 16) the Apostle Peter commanded to be baptized in water. Had Mr. Hawes been there he would apparently have condemned this last as needless; for what further benefits could they receive from the water, seeing they were already baptized with the Holy Ghost? We may, however, safely follow Peter in obedience to our Lord's command, and leave the question of 'benefits to be derived' in the hands of Him who says that in keeping of his commandments there is great reward."

"Baptism," says Rev. G. Hugh Jones (Margate), "is the Lord's command and the Christian's privilege."

Rev. Septimus Hobbs (Compton Valence Rectory, Dorchester), distinguishing between the outward form and inward operation, says: "Under the law every child or proselyte who received the outward sign of circumcision, was admitted into the fellowship of the people of God, and entitled to all the outward privileges of that community; but we are assured that multitudes of them were not circumcised in heart, and consequently never were in spirit and in truth children of God, and that finally such 'children of the Kingdom' will be cast out. He is not a Christian who is one outwardly, neither is that baptism which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Christian who is one inwardly, and baptism is that of the heart, in the spirit, not in the letter, whose praise is not of men but of God. Not of men, priests, or any other men, but of God, whose work it is by his Spirit."

As showing that a man may be saved without baptism, correspondents quote the case of the thief on the cross (Luke xxiii. 42, 43); and that a man may be baptized without undergoing a work of grace, they instance Simon Magus (Acts viii. 21-23).

W. S. (Harlesden, N.W.) writes: "The two ordinances appointed by our Lord are both commemorative—nothing more. Baptism commemorates the judicial death of the believer, as having been crucified with Christ (Gal. ii. 20, R.V.). The Lord's Supper commemorates the death of our Lord. The rite of baptism, as appointed in the Scriptures, is administered after the new birth, and therefore cannot by any possibility help or lead to it (see Matt. xxviii. 19, R.V.; Acts ii. 41; viii. 12; x. 47). The act of baptism signifies burial and resurrection (Rom. vi. 3, 4, R.V.; Col. ii. 12)."

Another correspondent says: "The sacraments are not means of grace, but witnesses of Divine operations." Several correspondents point out that baptismal regeneration implies the need for the saving work of Christ to be supplemented by human agency, and of course necessitates a priestly order. These are derogatory to the priesthood and glory of the Son of God.

Quoting the words of the Bishop of Lincoln, that "in baptism we become partakers of Christ, we are made members of the body of Christ, having a common life with all who are baptized," Hornsby (Hampstead) writes: "We have only to visit one of our large convict prisons, and on inquiry we will find that a very large majority of inmates have received the rite of baptism. Many such men have lived infamous and profligate lives. How, then, is it possible that they can through baptism 'have become partakers of Christ—were made members of the body of Christ, etc.'? 'By their fruits ye shall know them' (Matt. vii. 20). 'He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me' (John xiv. 21). I much fear that the teaching contained in Mr. Hawes's letter tends to the ruin of men's souls. I know a case of an habitual drunkard, who, in his semi-sober moments, tries to comfort his conscience in the belief that his soul is safe, because he was baptized in his childhood."

(To be concluded next week.)

LONDON FLOWER GIRLS.

With the coming on of winter, Mr. John A. Groom, of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission, Clerkenwell-close, is making arduous endeavours to meet the spiritual and temporal needs of his large constituency, which is always overtaken by hardship and suffering at this season of the year. Flowers are not only scarce and dear, people do not readily buy posies in rough wintry weather. The result is, that the poor flower-seller's one room, which she calls her home, will show a bare cupboard, and an empty grate; she herself would yield to despair, if there was no Bible-woman or missionary to visit her in the hour of trial. As a class, flower-girls are continually increasing; many are coming from Ireland to London to "better" their condition. There are many genuine Christians among them, and these often become members of the Guilds, which have their stations in different quarters of London, and at which an aggregate of 500 Gospel services have been held during the year.

A large number of girls have been taken from the streets to be trained for something better; but it appears to be impossible ever to overtake the demands of such a service, and hardly possible even to keep pace with it, with the limited resources available. The work seems to grow more urgent year by year, but the funds do not meet increasing necessities. Mr. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C., receives subscriptions and answers inquiries.

BLEAK DECEMBER.

A leaden hue o'erspreads the watery sky;
For one fair azure isle we search in vain:
There comes no glint through bleak and bitter rain
Of gladsome sunlight to the aching eye.
The keen blast smites us as we pause to sigh
O'er latest leaves of Autumn, drenched and dead;
While memory mourns the days of summer fled,
And hope looks on to spring's sweet "by-and-by."

Ah me! 'tis thus when veiled the Saviour's face
By inward clouds, our heaven appears obscure:
We miss the sunshine of his glorious grace,
And feel the chill love cannot long endure;
Then, 'mid regrets for joyous seasons gone,
Our high-born hopes to cloudless years press on.

ITALIAN MILITARY CHURCH.

For twenty-three years Signor Capellini has carried on Gospel work among the soldiers of Italy, and in the latest report the story is told of the most recent endeavours. We read: "In spite of the hard fight we have had against the Papacy and the Jesuits, the work of the Mission has made good progress; and the priests, with all their endeavours to attract the men, with their new clubs, opened in various parts of Rome, with every inducement to draw the soldiers thither, have not succeeded in perverting one single man from our church. The priests, seeing that all these means had failed, and that even writing to parish priests to sow discord between the soldiers in Rome and their parents in the villages did not answer, next thought of opening Roman Catholic book shops in the neighbourhood of our church. The employés of these shops placed themselves at the corners of the streets leading to the Hall, at the hour of the soldiers' liberty, stopping them on the way, and trying by every means to induce them not to come to us, but to accompany them to the Roman Catholic meetings and amusements.

"To this we must add the books the priests have had written and printed, expressly for soldiers, all most attractive and touching, and all ending in counselling the soldiers not to allow themselves to be seduced by the heretics (the Protestants), who are the ruin of the Church and of society and the authors of every evil and of every misery! All this opposition on the part of the Papacy against the Military Church in Rome, and in the other cities where we have stations, will show that if the priests take so much pains to oppose the Mission, it must have a certain value; and therefore it is necessary that our friends should protect it with greater energy, and endeavour to secure for it a suitable and independent location."

Whether describing in terms of gratitude his visit to England this year or his work among the soldiers Cav. Capellini is always buoyant with enthusiasm. His address is 14, Pozzo delle Cornacchie, Rome. The English correspondent of the work is Miss A. M. Stoddart, 36, York-street Chambers, Bryanston-square, London.

JEWS IN JERUSALEM.

Dear Sir,—The winter is upon us, and help is urgently needed for the employment of Jews at Abraham's Vineyard, Jerusalem, and for giving food, fuel, and drinking water to the sick and infirm. Our superintendent at the Vineyard states that numbers of the starving people apply for work every morning whom he cannot take on because there is not money enough for wages for all. It is sad to refuse them, and sadder still to have occasionally to reduce the number of workers when funds are low. The disturbances in Syria have reached Shechem (Nablous), but not Jerusalem; but the effect of the disturbances must be to raise prices of necessaries, and we hear that prices are rising at Jerusalem.

The highest number of men and boys employed daily at Abraham's Vineyard this season has been sixty-seven, making, with their families, 250 souls supported by industry. Among them are natives of Russia, Circassia, Persia, Arabia, Aleppo, Kurdistan, Palestine, and other countries. The work done is cultivation of the land, carpentry, olive-oil soap making, some blacksmiths' work, stone-cutting, building and constructing rock-hewn cisterns for storage of water. Our visitor among the sick has distributed clothing, food, and drinking water to many hundreds. The poor creatures, hundreds in number, who dwell in dark underground holes, and those who have nothing but wooden sheds to keep them from winter's rain and snow, and no food to depend on but herbs from the wayside, cannot survive the winter unless help be given. Numbers are ill, many blind, some idiotic, some insane. We earnestly ask help to carry on, during the winter months, the work of relief by giving food and work in Palestine in token of Christian sympathy.

Letters to the Editor.

FROM A READER.

Dear Sir,—Let me take this opportunity of thanking you for the excellent and useful notes on "Daily Readings"; they are most helpful.

I think it would be an interesting thing if you asked all those who read the notes regularly with the daily chapter to send you a post card at the end of this year. I wonder how many you would get from those who read the paper even in the United Kingdom.

You have kindly given these notes for some years; they should be valued, and I believe they are.—Faithfully yours, W. H. Dawson.

CHRISTIAN GIVING.

Sir,—My father was a poor Baptist minister, with eleven children and a salary of £130 a year. He always trained us to believe that it was right to give a tenth of our income to the Lord—and I believe he himself did more, for he never had any holiday—and I always remember a sacred drawer where the tenth of some money was kept, and out of which we were supplied for collections.

This was done at great cost, but God has blessed us very much as a family; nine of us grew up and were married, and eight of us are still living, although my father has been dead twenty-two years. I continued the giving of the tenth, often at a cost, and have more and more grown into feeling it a great privilege, and to extend it. I have one daughter a missionary and another in training as a medical, also to be a missionary, and I am certain it is an untold blessing, thus persistently, and at a cost, so to give, for God is no man's debtor, and He repays splendidly, although reward should not be the motive.—Yours sincerely, Repaid.

THE POPE AND CHRISTENDOM.

Dear Sir,—The other day I was talking with an old disciple, an Italian, who was formerly a priest in the Romish Church, about the Pope's circular letter to Christendom, and he asked me to put the following points before the Christians of England. He suggested that in answer to the Pope's letter inviting the various sections of the Church to come under his sway, a monument be raised in one of the principal sites of Rome to commemorate the life and death of all reformers who sealed with their blood their testimony for the doctrines of Free Grace and the anti-Christian character of the Papacy. This structure might comprise a museum, auditorium, etc. Such a reply would leave the Pope in no uncertainty as to the convictions of present-day Protestants, and would be of great educative value to our children and our children's children.

Apart altogether from this suggestion, it seems to me that the letters sent to Rome, whether open or otherwise, by the various denominations, are far too uncertain in tone. While not being any less courteously worded, they might have given a more decided testimony against Mariolatry and kindred blasphemies, and proclaimed with greater clearness our hearty adhesion to the truths restored to us at the Reformation.

May I ask your sympathy and supplication for us in our difficult work amongst the Moslems? They have plenty of the fanaticism and pride of religiosity; but, alas! they are spiritually dead.—Yours very truly, Wm. Summers.

DR. HANDLEY MOULE AND REV. ANDREW MURRAY.

Dear Sir,—I ask leave to make a personal statement in a matter where it seems important. A fortnight ago to-day, at the special request of a friend, I wrote a letter to the editor of Things to Come, referring to a review in that periodical of Rev. A. Murray's "Holiest of All." The review criticised some phrases in that book, and I thought the criticisms so far just that they pointed out some very real perils in the phraseology; but the tone of the review was painfully harsh towards Mr. Murray, and, incidentally, towards the whole "Keswick" movement. I was asked to write what might, without compromise, tend to conciliation and avert a breach in the (not too numerous) ranks of the servants of our Master; and this I did to the best of my ability. Since writing, however, I have been distressed to find that my letter has been referred to in private as a "condemnation of Mr. Murray's heresies"—words expressing what was very far indeed from my thought in the writing.

Finding that great pain had been given (by this report) to some of my most honoured friends, I felt it my duty to seek to withdraw the letter. But my telegram, sent last Wednesday, Nov. 27, came too late. The editor has now, at my request, inserted a "slip" in the forthcoming number of Things to Come, saying what my wish had been. For this I am grateful. But I think it due to Mr. Murray, not to speak of others, that I should thus explain more fully the circumstances under which I wrote. I was asked to write what should be for peace, and I had grave reason to fear it might be taken for war—war with a movement to which I owe great blessings, and with a saint whom personally I love and revere, though I felt constrained to deplore some inadvertent perils in his expression. Had I foreseen, I should have limited myself to a private communication with Mr. Murray. I may add that he has been kind enough to call on me at Cambridge. In this interview (our first) I expressed my convictions with perfect freedom, and was met with noble candour and kindness; and I came to the thankful conclusion that as to our meaning we were in entire accord on the subject of our Lord's most sacred and immaculate humanity.—Very faithfully yours,

H. C. G. Moule.

RELUCTANT GIVERS.

Dear Sir,—I have been asked to write a few lines on a subject which is of importance to many readers of The Christian. An illustration will best explain my meaning.

A friend of mine, who collects for some charitable object, recollected that one of the annual subscribers had forwarded no help for many months. A report was sent, but no response followed, and a letter had to be written, enumerating the special needs requiring funds, which might easily have been perceived by a glance over the report. After some days the lady gave a donation of one shilling, and my friend wrote again with "acknowledgments and thanks."

Now here was a net gain of 10½d., entailing considerable time and trouble on the collector, and the same thing happens again and again. Why do not the Lord's stewards dispense the Lord's money willingly? Why do they wait to be entreated for help, and multiply burdens on shoulders already weary?

Surely every Christian should be "fully persuaded in his own mind" how much of his income may be lawfully devoted to charity, and, having determined on the special branch of work which appeals most to his sympathies, ought to forward regularly his contribution, whether great or small. Only those who labour in gathering up the grain know what a relief it would be to receive the waggon-loads at the store-house door, and not to be forced to glean all day in the field, with aching back, and anxious mind.

Mr. C. H. Judd, of the China Inland Mission, put this very forcibly in a recent address. He said that if God's people realised what an honour it was to be permitted to give to the Lord, there would be no more collecting-cards or boxes, no more pleading and urging, but each one would willingly offer according to his several ability, "not grudgingly, nor of necessity."

The much-despised Chinese set us a noble example in this way. When the project of presenting a Bible to the Dowager Empress was set on foot last year numbers of Christian peasants pressed Mr. Judd to add their mites to the required sum. Yet these people were so poor as to be unable to afford light in their miserable dwellings when evening fell, and some lived in semi-starvation on one meal a day. He could not refuse their offerings, for beaming faces told him that they spoke truly in saying it was a great joy to be allowed to help, and surely the King of Kings loved those "cheerful givers" (2 Cor. ix. 7).

"How much owest thou unto my Lord?" is a question for all of us, and we should regard a debt to Him as demanding payment far more urgently than any earthly account! Yet how many would feel themselves dishonoured by leaving a just bill unliquidated, who never realise that they "rob God in tithe and offerings"? (Malachi iii. 8.)

It is a well-known proverb that "He gives twice who gives at once" (bis dat qui cito dat), and much trial would be spared if Christians would not put off acting on generous impulses until some human intervention takes away the happy feeling of giving directly to the Lord. When a collector comes in and prevails on you to "put down your name" for a certain sum, do you not cherish a vague sense of resentment at having been persuaded to give so much "to Miss L——"? Would it not be far better to carry your mite or your million into the sanctuary and cast it before the Lord with your own hands?

I know that many do give voluntarily and abundantly; but I would urge on those who do not, to give of their own free will and pleasure (Matt. x. 8).

Did the women "who ministered to Christ of their substance," wait to be asked for alms? I trow not.

It is degrading our "call to be saints." It is dishonouring to our higher nature—this organisation of "special pleaders" for charities. Let us make a stand against it even now, and God will richly bless the effort to our own souls.—Yours truly,

C. Maud Battersby.

MR. SPIERS IN DUNDEE.

Dundee has been favoured by a visit from Mr. Josiah Spiers, of the Children's Special Service Mission. After two meetings for teachers, the real work among the children began on Sunday, November 3, and continued for three happy weeks, the result being that very many little ones have found a Friend in Jesus. All who know Mr. Spiers will remember his bright way with children, and the simplicity and clearness with which he puts the Gospel before them. At the close of each service an after-meeting was held, when Mr. Spiers and his helpers in the work had conversation with those children and young people who were seeking the Saviour, with the happiest results.

Mr. Spiers spent many a forenoon visiting the great schools of our city, leaving in the hands of the teachers about 7,000 of the Society's picture leaflets for distribution among their scholars; thus the Gospel has been carried into thousands of households all over the town. Mr. Spiers also went almost daily to meet the children coming from school, with his pockets full of stories, and before many days were over he had in this way won the hearts of many of them, and was greeted everywhere by their happy smiles. BIRKENHEAD Y.M.C.A.

Mr. W. R. Lane began a brief mission here with a prayer meeting, on Saturday, November 23. On Sunday afternoon he addressed The P.S.A., there being about 600 men present. In the evening the capacity of the large hall was taxed to its utmost, the meeting being open to men and women. Meetings were held each evening up to Friday, November 29, and at every gathering abundant signs of God's presence were manifest. Converts in large numbers publicly confessed their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, many being young men belonging to the Y.M.C.A. Perhaps the greatest blessing was evident on Thursday evening, when Mr. Lane told the story of his conversion.

Mention should also be made of the strengthening of many Christians and the restoring of numbers of backsliders. The Bible readings in the afternoons were largely attended and proved most helpful.

PORTSMOUTH SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.

DEAR SIR,—In answer to several inquiries, may I inform your readers that my retirement from "active service" in connection with the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute does not mean that the work has stopped. One department, indeed, is being carried on with double activity, to meet doubled needs—I mean the troopship work, which has been for nineteen years, without a break, the special and most useful feature of our Institute.

Now that the chief part of the trooping has been removed to Southampton, our Portsmouth Institute (as was to be expected) proved equal to the emergency; and, with the permission of both military and dockyard authorities, is carrying on the work at Southampton in exactly the same manner as at Portsmouth. There is a coffee shed in full swing; there are stores of warm garments and wraps for the families of soldiers; there are our Institute workers, both male and female, on every troopship that comes and goes, for hours together, with the little books, and words of kindness or advice. Frequent meetings are held on board as opportunity offers; and all is done, as in these many years past, under official sanction. It is our superintendent's great desire that persons visiting Southampton should try to see for themselves what is being done. Mr. Sidney Smith is not one to write or talk about the work much; indeed, he is too busy. He always goes to Southampton himself with his workers, and is indefatigable.

All this, of course, means much additional expense, and I do hope the many friends of soldiers will not slacken their kind efforts on behalf of the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute, nor transfer their help to new (and therefore untried) workers, under the mistaken impression that the Portsmouth Institute is failing in its duty.—Yours sincerely and obliged,

SARAH ROBINSON.

VILLAGE PASTORS.

THE pastor of Abbey-road Chapel, St. John's Wood, has again invited several of the pastors from village churches to spend two days in quiet fellowship, and in gaining a fuller acquaintance with the difficulties of the village ministers. A goodly number responded from Bucks and Herts. Topics of practical interest were introduced, and much information was gleaned. The isolation, the long distances in many cases to be covered, the results of agricultural depression, the aloofness of those of higher social position who come to reside in the villages, the difficulties connected with education, the schools, the poverty of the many, and the loss of the young people by migration to the towns, were presented in a fresh light because told by the very workers and sufferers. The joys of village work were not omitted. We heard of heroic fidelity to principle, of the love of the labourer for the Bible and his knowledge of the truth, the attachment of the people "when they know you," as one said. This is the second meeting of this kind at Abbey-road, and the brethren expressed in unstinted terms their belief that such gatherings were calculated to do real good—to make the workers feel that they were not forgotten.

CHELMSFORD.—Mr. J. J. Scroggie delivered last Sunday a Gospel address from the words, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven." The meeting had been prefaced by united prayer, which was largely answered. Many were deeply convicted, and several professed saving faith in Christ. Pray for a special week amongst the children at Chelmsford, commencing on Saturday, December 8.

MR. GEORGE HUCKLESBY, who for eighteen years past has been identified chiefly with the work of the Evangelistic mission, having principal charge of the Malden Hall branch, where much blessing has attended his labours, has now left London to take up the charge of the work at Brimscombe, Gloucestershire, which was for long successfully conducted by the late Mr. J. J. Smith. As a mark of respect and affection in which he has been held at Malden Hall, a social gathering took place on Monday, the 25th ult., and was largely attended, the hall being nearly full. Messrs. C. Russell Hurditch, P. Garrioch, William Groves, J. Spruut, W. Barnard Smith, Mills, and Ingram spoke, while in the course of the evening a purse containing over £47 was presented, as a token of love from the Christians assembling at Malden Hall.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

ON Sunday the Bishop of Stepney preached the 'Varsity sermon, and Canon Scott Holland preached in Great St. Mary's in the evening.

Dr. Moule concluded his series of Bible readings on the Epistle to the Ephesians on Sunday morning. These have been very well attended, the hall having been crowded out nearly every Sunday, and they have been exceedingly helpful to those who were regular attendants.

The speaker at the Cambridge Inter-Collegiate Christian Union was Mr. Arthur Mercer. These Gospel meetings will in future be held in the Guildhall, instead of the Alexandra Hall, as the latter is not considered sufficiently central.

Considerable interest is being taken in the coming Liverpool Conference for University men interested in missionary work. A large number of delegates hope to go from Cambridge, and nearly every college will have one or more representatives.

IRISH NOTES.

MR. C. H. OLIVER, M.A., son of Rev. John Oliver, Methodist minister, Belfast, has been appointed by the Chinese government president of the Imperial College, Pekin.

The first of a series of pleasant Saturday evenings for the people has been held in Lynn Hall, Armagh, under the presidency of Rev. R. Cole. It was very largely attended, and proved a great success.

The Christian Endeavour Society of Knock, Belfast, maintains an orphan girl at one of the mission-schools in China, and University-road Sunday-school, Belfast, supports and educates two girls in India.

The Irish branch of the National Anti-Gambling League promises to put forth vigorous efforts for rousing public opinion regarding this monster vice, which is eating into the very vitals of the community.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A CONFERENCE in connection with the Border Counties Christian Union has been held at Galashiels. Mr. R. Hill, of Melrose, presided.

On a recent evening, about sixty persons were publicly baptized by Mr. W. G. Carr, evangelist at Hopetoun Hall, Fountainbridge, Edinburgh.

At the annual meeting in Edinburgh of the Scottish Coast Mission much testimony was borne to the usefulness of the Society's operations among seafaring people.

The Y.M.C.A. buildings at Kirkcaldy, erected as a memorial to the late Provost Swan, will be publicly opened on Dec. 23. Lord Overtoun will perform the ceremony.

The last monthly meeting of the Glasgow Christian Workers Union took the shape of a conference on the spiritual life. Helpful addresses were given by Mr. A. Ferrie and Mr. J. G. Govan.

It is intended to present to Mr. Harry A. Long, of Glasgow, a tangible token of esteem before he leaves for Australia at the end of February next. The secretary of the fund is Mr. D. Burnside, 122, Ingram-street, Glasgow.

The recent death of Miss Janet Livingstone, sister of the great missionary explorer, has recalled many interesting incidents in his early life. She was eleven years younger than her famous brother, and was 77 at the time of her death.

The Glasgow Medical Missionary Society, which had its annual meeting last week, is doing an excellent work among the sick poor of the city. Its field of operations also forms a training ground for ladies devoting themselves to foreign work as medical missionaries.

A series of interesting meetings were held in Glasgow last week in connection with the Tibetan Mission Band. Mr. Cecil Polhill Turner described the position and prospects of the work. He spoke of the earnestness and success of the Moravian brethren, who had been at work among the Tibetans in the neighbourhood of Darjeeling for forty years.

LONDON CRIPPLES.—The third anniversary of Mr. Boyer's work among London waifs and cripples was recently held in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. In the afternoon tea was provided for about 600 cripples and their attendants, also 200 grandmothers, and about 800 friends. In the evening addresses were given by Messrs. S. Dean (the chairman), W. Cadman, J. F. Shorey, H. Clogg, and others. The report, read by Mr. C. L. Boyer, the superintendent, was of a satisfactory character. The important feature of the past year has been the opening of a Holiday Home at Margate.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

A NEW YORK Junior, belonging to the Floating Christian Endeavour Society, has been the means of organising an Endeavour Society in a Seamen's Bethel in France.

The young people's societies of Richmond, Va., have united for the purpose of distributing good literature to the city institutions, hospitals, barbers' shops, railway stations, etc.

The Fellowship Union Witness of New South Wales contains a glowing account of a C. E. Convention in Newtown, Sydney. The Endeavour movement seems to be going ahead in the sunny south.

With the beginning of winter the C.E. movement in North Wales, as in other places, seems to have received a new impetus. There is everywhere an awakening of the societies, and many new ones are being formed.

The patriotic aspect of the convention meetings is being made evident in very tangible form throughout American Christian Endeavour circles. The opposition to the saloon and the liquor traffic was never so definite and persistent as it is to-day among the young people.

Some Endeavourers of Anita, Iowa, becoming concerned at the wholesale and wanton destruction of birds for ornamental purposes, have circulated a pledge among Anita young women Endeavourers, wherein they promised not to wear birds' plumage as ornaments.

Dalziel's New York correspondent telegraphs:—A remarkable step has been taken by the members of the Christian Endeavour Society throughout the whole of the country. Precisely at noon to-day the Christian Endeavourers, who number about a quarter of a million, offered a prayer of fifteen minutes' duration for the conversion of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, the famous atheist lecturer. Every Christian Endeavour Society held a special service with that object. Reports from the different cities say that the churches were crowded with people, the congregations appearing to be thoroughly in earnest.

"A MONTH IN A HOSPITAL."

"ANOTHER INVALID" sends us an interesting corroboration of the faithfulness of God in suffering, during seven years of comparative helplessness. At last she was sent to an hospital, and being "wheeled into the hospital in a chair, she walked out alone," after seven months of treatment. During this period she learned many lessons of the Lord, and was greatly cheered to discover gradually how many true servants of God there were among nurses and patients. Mutually they encouraged one another, and found opportunities to speak of Him to others. This simple testimony proves afresh that those who are willing to be used need never fail of opportunities no matter where they may be placed.

Another friend sends "The Story of his Conversion" in hospital, not, so far as appears, through any human agency, but largely by reason of the terror which fell upon him when he was ordered to go into hospital to undergo a dangerous operation. Feeling he might not survive, he turned to God in his distress, and the Lord heard him and saved him from all his troubles; not only in bringing him through the ordeal he dreaded, but also in teaching him to "have faith in God."

He adds his testimony to that of "A Lady Patient" as to the kindness of the nurses and sisters. During his long sojourn in the hospital (twelve weeks) he saw fifty patients come and go in his ward alone; he came in contact with many different nurses, and all were most kind to the sufferers under their care, and the same may be said of the doctors.

OPIUM IN CHINA.—At a public meeting held recently, at Lewes, Mr. R. J. Davidson, missionary from China, stated that fifty years ago, in the city of Chung-King, there was not a single opium den, but to-day there are 3000. The statement is significant as showing the terrible increase, in recent years, of the debauching habit of opium-smoking.—The Sentinel.

A FARM COLONY FOR EPILEPTICS has been opened at Chalfont St. Peter. A freehold farm to the extent of 135 acres has been given by Mr. Passmore Edwards to the National Society for the Employment of Epileptics, and he has erected a Home, besides offering to build two others, one for boys and one for girls afflicted with this disease. There have already been some iron buildings occupied for over a year by eighteen epileptic patients, and the number of colonists has now been increased to thirty-six. Each, if able, pays 10s. a week, and they are employed chiefly in farm work, which is held to mitigate the malady, inasmuch as the patients have had fewer fits since their admission.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The results of the recent mission in Lincoln are now being gathered in.

Rev. J. McNeill did not receive anything out of the funds of the recent mission at Sunderland, as stated in our issue of last week.

The annual report of the Brisbane Association is not a very voluminous pamphlet, but it contains substantial evidence that the Association is alive and doing good work.

The report of Shaftesbury House, Margate, tells of a year's good work, and indicates the value of the Home to many young men in need of rest and change. The Gospel work in "The Hall by the Sea" and on the beach has been much blessed.

A report of the Melbourne Association in The Southern Cross says: "The past has been an eventful week in the history of the Y.M.C.A., as we are losing the services of our general secretary, Mr. Arthur Nichols, who has been elected organising secretary for the Victorian Auxiliaries' Union of the British and Foreign Bible Society."

A reception was given by the rector of Exeter College, at the Oxford Y.M.C.A., on November 29. Mr. W. Jones, M.P., and Rev. W. A. Badger (rector of Lydford, Devon) were the principal speakers. Members of Mansfield College arranged the musical programme. The tone of the meeting was of a high character, and there was a large attendance of members on the occasion.

On Thursday last a score of enthusiastic lady friends of New Cross Association met in the drawing-room, and after hearing a most inspiring address from Miss Eleanor Thorne, late Hon. Sec. Derby Y.M.C.A. (ladies' auxiliary), it was unanimously decided to form a ladies' auxiliary in connection with this branch. About fifteen members were enrolled there and then, and Miss Sly was elected hon. secretary.

Addresses were delivered at the Manchester Association last week, by the Bishop of Durham, Canon Scott-Holland, and Canon Gore, on the great social question. The speakers treated it from the Christian standpoint, equally binding upon employers and employed, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and holding all property as responsible to God for its use. The large hall was densely crowded, and the addresses were listened to with intense interest.

At the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Whitwell, the general secretaries in the Midland district met at their residence in Birmingham, for a "quiet day" on November 26. Papers were read on "The Secretary's Own Spiritual Life," by Mr. Charlton Jones, of Worcester, and "The Secretary in Relation to the Religious Agencies of the Association," by Mr. T. L. Bates, of West Bromwich. The gathering was a very happy and helpful one, and a time of spiritual blessing to all present.

The Glasgow United Associations have issued a complete and comprehensive report, showing 9568 members. Seventeen new branches have been added during the past year. The number of fellowship meetings is now 237. The work in the various sections is carried on with far-seeing and painstaking care for the interests of young men, for whom every provision, social, educational, and spiritual, seems to be made. The evangelistic operations have been greatly blessed, while the missionary spirit is alive and practical.

A number of interesting meetings have been held in the North-Eastern District. Mr. George Reed presided over a good meeting at Yarm, Mr. J. B. Hodgkin was in the chair at the Darlington delegates' meeting on Wednesday, when friends attended from Middleborough, Stockton, Richmond, and Yarm. Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Cochrane gave a social evening at Hetton, Mr. J. B. Service, Sunderland; Mr. Dearden, Newcastle; and Mr. Wm. Smith, Durham, being the speakers. A successful annual meeting of members was held at Hartlepool.

The Southwark Y.M.C.A. secured eighteen special sermons to young men in the neighbouring churches in connection with the week of prayer. On Sunday, 10th, Rev. F. B. Meyer followed the service by a special meeting for men only, when the secretary of the Y.M.C.A. brought the claims of the Association before the gathering. On Monday a special meeting was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle; many testimonies were given of the usefulness of the Y.M.C.A. A nightly meeting held during the week at Newington Causeway was a time of real uplifting of the members.

The annual gathering in connection with the Stockton Association was held on Thursday, 21st, at the Association's rooms, Mill-lane, about 200 members and friends of the Association being present. A meeting of members and friends of the Association was subsequently held in the lecture-hall of the Association, and was presided over by the Mayor of Thornaby (Alderman William Whitwell, president of the Association), and who congratulated the members on the good work which the Y.M.C.A. was doing. The number of members of the Association it was stated had increased during the year from 210 to 244.

Representatives of Y.M.C.A.'s in Sussex and Kent, numbering upwards of sixty, assembled for their autumn conference at Eastbourne, on the 27th inst., under the chairmanship of Mr. Thomas Woods, newly elected President of the Eastbourne Association. Mr. George Holmes, travelling secretary, reported visits paid to associations in the district with encouraging results. Interesting discussion took place during the afternoon upon the definite work of the Association (introduced by Mr. W. N. Morris, gen. sec., Croydon), and upon "means for deepening the spiritual life of the members" (introduced by Mr. W. H. Mills). The Soldiers' Christian Associations, which were represented by Mr. A. H. Wheeler (gen. sec.) and Sergeant Lazell of the School of Musketry, were affiliated as auxiliaries. Mr. Marriage Wallis, Brighton, was appointed president of the District Union. It was agreed that the next conference should be held at Folkestone.

THE Y.W.C.A.

A new branch is about to be started in connection with St. Phillip's, Kennington-road (Rev. W. Horne).

A social evening was held in Melbourne, to welcome Miss Reynolds, the world's secretary of the Association, now on a visit to Australia.

A series of lectures on "Nursing and Health," in connection with the Y.W.C.A., is being delivered by Dr. Jones, of Caerffynnon, in Dolgelley.

The Newcastle branch, established four years ago, has received a visit from Miss Ericson, travelling secretary. Fresh interest, it is believed, has been awakened.

On Wednesday a social evening was spent by nearly 300 members and friends at the Digby Institute, Bournemouth, to welcome the president (Miss Wingfield Digby), after an absence of some months.

At the Conference of the International Board, held at Brooklyn, N.Y., Mrs. Elizabeth White, the coloured delegate from Virginia, spoke warmly of the efforts which that State was making to elevate the coloured race.

The Neath Association held its second annual meeting at the Town Hall, under the presidency of the ex-mayor, Councillor Hopkin Morgan. There was a large audience, and the deepest interest was taken in the proceedings.

The second annual meeting of the Dewsbury branch was held in the Association Rooms, Union-street, when the chair was taken by Rev. R. S. Davies, vicar of Earlsheaton. Miss Bradley read a very interesting report, and the financial statement showed a small balance in hand. Miss Whitwell, of Kendal, gave an address.

The fourth anniversary of the High Barnet Association was celebrated on Thursday, November 28, by a drawing-room meeting in the afternoon and a members' tea and meeting in the evening, presided over by Mrs. Trotter. The secretary's report showed an increase of forty-two members during the year, making a total of 203.

The eighth annual meeting of the Wakefield Y.W.C.A. was held in the rooms in Southgate. The report read by Miss Ellis stated that God had signally blessed the work, and that many young women in Wakefield would be grateful for having been brought under its influence. Miss Russell, the late secretary, has gone to Chili to work amongst the railway men of Iquique. The total membership is 106.

The Sydney Association has one member in China, Miss Booth, who went out in 1890. The Hobart Association is represented in the foreign field by a member in India, and another in China, who had worked with the late Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, but was in Hobart at the time of the massacre. Two others have offered for service in South Africa. The Melbourne Institute has several members in the foreign field, five being in China.

At Dundee, the Saturday monthly teas draw large audiences. Twopence each is paid by those who attend. The large hall was packed on Saturday week, and Rev. Thomas Best, of Broughty Ferry, gave an address on "Women's Influence," special emphasis being laid on the great influence which a young woman has in the total abstinence cause. A number signed the Association's temperance pledge-book, and several joined the Y.W.C.A.

SERMON-LANE MISSION.—Our annual dinners to sandwich men, connected with the Cattle Show at the Royal Agricultural Hall, will take place December 10 and 12, at 12 noon. We hope to entertain 500 men each day, and tell them of Jesus, who freely offers them living bread. We purpose holding a conference on "Mission Work, or how to Reach the Masses," some time in January.

W. Harry Dawe.

OBITUARY.

GENERAL G. G. ANDERSON, PLUMSTEAD.

This devoted servant of Christ passed away on Saturday, 23rd ult., at his residence at Plumstead. The second son of the late Major-General W. C. Anderson, R.A., he was born in 1823, and entered the Bengal Infantry in 1839. He saw much active service in the Punjaub, and at the battles of Chilianwala and Gujarat was twice wounded. He was, we understand, converted in India, and after his retirement, took an active part in Christian work. Some years age he married Miss Russell, of the Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead, giving interest and thought to the work of this valuable mission.

MR. WILLIAM UNITT.

The removal of Mr. William Unitt has left a blank at the Ogle Mews Ragged School which will not easily be filled. For thirty-three years he gave thought, time, and work without stint to promote the interests of the institution. He was permitted to see two enlargements of the structure, and to witness the development of a successful group of agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents, which, by God's blessing, have been of untold benefit to thousands. He attended an important committee meeting at the school on Tuesday evening, Nov. 26, although suffering from bronchitis, and returned home to pass away within twenty-four hours to higher service, and to hear his Master's "Well done."

REV. FRANK SODEN, HERNE BAY.

This useful minister of Christ passed away at the Manse, Herne, on Monday week, from an attack of pleurisy and congestion. Mr. Soden, who was sixty-three years of age, was trained at Cheshunt College, and commenced his ministerial career as assistant at Union-street, Brighton, where he laboured for nearly three years. In 1856, he accepted the pastorate at Lower Clapton; during his thirty-three years' ministry a new church was erected, the building being within a short time entirely freed from debt. Owing to failure of health he resigned, in 1888, the pastorate, the next few years being spent in continental travel and a journey to Canada. In June, 1893, he accepted the pastorate at Herne Bay, which he held until his death. "In the summer season," writes a resident, "with the visitors he was an especial power."

MRS. LUCY ELIZABETH CLERKE.

Lucy Elizabeth Clerke, née Rainey, the beloved wife of Mr. Alexander Clerke, C.E., passed into the immediate presence of the Lord on Monday, Oct. 14, at North Adelaide, Australia. This devoted follower and faithful servant of Christ was the eldest daughter of the late Mr. A. C. Rainey, formerly of Dublin, and the eldest sister of Mr. J. Crofton Rainey, now of Baldon, near Oxford. Her memory is still fragrant in Ireland, and especially in Dublin, where for many years she was not only the wise loving mother to her eight motherless younger brothers and sisters, but also a diligent and fervent worker for God, and friend to his people. While not mourning for her, her many old friends will not forget the husband and young family of six children, three girls (the eldest scarce nineteen years of age), and three boys bereft of her presence, counsel, and love.

MRS. MACLACHLAN, SEN.

One of the oldest inhabitants in Bournemouth entered into the eternal rest on November 18, after about nine months of great physical weakness and gradual decay of nature, at the age of ninety-five.

Born in the second month of this century, she was the daughter of Mr. William Carruthers, of Dormont, Dumfriesshire, by his wife, Mary Anne, of Arthington Hall, Yorkshire. Early in life she married Robert MacLachlan, and for many years they lived a very quiet, uneventful life in their Highland home in Argyllshire until in the winter of 1847-48 she became a confirmed invalid. About 1864 they removed to Bournemouth, and from that time her health somewhat improved, so that after attaining the age of sixty she published eight volumes of notes, chiefly on the prophetic Scriptures, from manuscripts she had written during the previous fifteen years of constant physical suffering. Mr. MacLachlan died in 1874, and for twenty-one years of widowhood she has patiently and cheerfully awaited God's time for their re-union, although longing to "depart and be with Christ." During her last night on earth she suddenly lifted her hands and exclaimed, "Bless the Lord!" Her mortal remains were laid to rest on November 22 in her husband's grave in the Christchurch cemetery, when Rev. William Frith read 1 Thess. iv. 13-18, and offered prayer.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Wickham Market.—Mr. J. Crofton Rainey, of Baldon, Oxford, has conducted a very happy mission in the Foresters' Hall, November 24 to 29.

Amersham.—A very successful mission has been concluded at Amersham, for which praise is asked. The mission was conducted by Revs. H. Trueman, of Chesham; J. Wilkins, of Wendover; W. Dorey, of Missenden; and the pastor, J. Colley.

Newport, Mon.—Very successful services were conducted by Rev. J. McNeill from Nov. 17 to 22 in the largest hall in the town. At the closing service a spontaneous expression of the feeling of pastors and workers was handed to the evangelist.

Godalming.—Mr. J. G. Stanger, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded, at the Meadrow Mission-hall, on Sunday, a fourteen days' mission. The attendances throughout were most gratifying. Mr. Stanger has accomplished much fruitful work in this district.

Great Staughton, St. Neots.—A very interesting and helpful ten days' mission, conducted by Mr. John Burnham, was brought to a close here on Tuesday week. Large congregations gathered nightly. Friends came from other villages, and many were richly blessed and encouraged.

Pokesdown.—Miss E. A. Backway, of Blandford, conducted a Gospel Mission, in the Congregational Church, from November 17th to 25th. Many bore testimony to blessing received. The missioner is a lady of great earnestness, and sets forth the truth with much acceptability.

Ireland.—A series of Gospel services has been held in Mountpottinger Methodist Church, Belfast, by Miss Wakefield, of Portadown; Gospel services have also been held by Rev. Canon Robinson, in St. Mark's Church, Dublin; and in White Abbey Congregational Church by Rev. H. T. Potten, and Messrs. J. H. George and J. A. Brown.

Bedworth.—Rev. R. Balgarnie has been engaged in a special mission at the Old Meeting House, Bedworth, Warwickshire, Rev. J. Slevan, pastor. The services were well attended, and the ingathering most encouraging. The church was founded in 1686 by the rector of the parish church, who was one of the ejected ministers, and was also imprisoned for Christ. Mr. Balgarnie commences a mission at Exeter on Saturday, December 7.

Chelmsford.—Rev. E. Davidson has held a ten days' mission, fraught with much blessing. Earnest preparation had been made, and the great expectations formed were abundantly fulfilled. The men's meeting was a splendid success. The Bible-readings on "Holiness" were times of spiritual refreshment. The interest and power deepened as the days advanced. A zealous band of workers heartily supported the missioner, and many prayers will follow him to other fields.

Lerwick, Shetland.—A special mission has been held here by Messrs. M'Gregor and Crawford, of the Edinburgh Gospel Mission, which has been blessed to many. A work of grace has begun amongst the outcast women of the town, some of whom came to every service, and continue attending Sunday-school and other meetings. The pastor (C. James Jackman), assisted by the Christian Endeavour, is holding cottage meetings in the worst parts of the town, and these have already been fraught with blessing.

Manchester.—Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a twenty-one days' mission in the City-road Mission Hall, a spacious hall erected by Mr. John Galloway. The results of a mission held here a year ago by Mr. Notman are still to be seen in the changed lives of many who have been amongst the most earnest of the workers at the mission just ended. During the last three weeks signs have followed the preaching of the Word, and many have professed decision for Christ.
R. H.

Hertford.—Mr. Frank Tarrant, of the Evangelization Society, has concluded a successful fifteen days' mission in connection with the Hertford Y.M.C.A. The meetings were chiefly for men, but on several occasions were open to all, the rooms being then crowded. The Gospel was clearly and faithfully proclaimed night after night, and we have a good hope that several were led to accept Jesus as their own personal Saviour. Christians are also bearing witness to a quickening in their own souls. A noon-day prayer-meeting, held during the mission, proved a time of refreshment. HUDSON DIXON.

Lincoln.—Mr. Thos. A. Bailey has held a fruitful series of evangelistic meetings under the auspices of the Lincoln Y.M.C.A. The mission commenced on Sunday, November 10, and was to have been concluded on the 17th, but the results were so encouraging that it was deemed well to extend it to the following Thursday. Very helpful Bible Readings were held in the afternoons, and each evening Gospel meetings for young men only. Many Christians have been led out into more definite service, and a goodly number of young men have been brought to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. It is probably many years since Lincoln witnessed such a happy revival of real evangelistic effort to reach young men. Our hearts are full of gratitude to God for the "great things" He has done amongst us through his servant. GEO. W. RANKIN.

Rev. John McNeill, on the invitation of a large number of the clergy and ministers, held united mission services in Swansea from Nov. 24 to 29. It is felt that his visit will be productive of great good. Large numbers, representing all classes, attended each service. It was a stirring sight to witness the great audiences listening with rapt and eager attention to the earnest and manly utterances of the preacher. Many hearts have been moved and many lives quickened, and earnest prayers follow Mr. McNeill that his mission in Cardiff, now going on, may be followed by God's abundant blessing. W. N.

Sleaford.—Rev. Thomas Waugh has concluded a successful mission. The town and surrounding villages had been thoroughly canvassed, and prayerful preparation made. On the evening of the second Sunday and Monday every available spot was filled by the crowds which flocked to hear the Gospel, many seeking in vain to gain admittance. On several evenings difficulty was experienced in finding sitting room for all those who desired to remain for the "after-meetings." Altogether above 150 seekers entered the inquiry-room. One special feature has been the large number of married couples who have sought the Lord together. In some cases salvation has come to the whole house. In the number of people assembling from night to night; in the brotherly co-operation of Christians of different denominations, headed by their ministers; in the spirit of prayerfulness and self-denying toil; in the widespread interest; in the quickened spirituality among Christians; in the deep penitence, strong faith, and clear conversion of seekers—this mission is unique in the spiritual history of the town.

PERSONALIA.

Miss Bradfield has arrived safely in Bristol, after having spent seven years in mission work in China.

Rev. Andrew Murray and Mrs. Murray sail for their South African home on Saturday next from Southampton by the s.s. Moor.

Miss S. M. Etches—daughter of the Rev. W. H. Etches, of Bath—has accepted an appointment as an honorary worker in connection with the newly-formed Women's Department of the C.M.S.

Rev. Dr. Howie, late of Canada, is now settled in Mount Lebanon, itinerating as a volunteer evangelist. He will be glad to correspond with Christians who may desire a temporary home in Mount Lebanon for the sake of health or study. His address is Shweir, via Beyrout, Syria.

A very sad accident occurred on Sunday evening at the Metropolitan Music Hall, where Mr. Charles Cook conducted his usual evangelistic service. His little boy Willie, aged six, was, with childish curiosity, exploring "behind the scenes," when he fell through an opening to a depth of twenty feet. The fracture of the skull caused instant death. Our readers will, we are sure, bear up in prayer and sympathy the sorrowing parents in their distressing bereavement.

Miss Ferguson, who is about to join Miss Annie R. Taylor, of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission, will sail from Liverpool on Jan. 5th, 1896, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Polhill-Turner, who have kindly entered into this arrangement at Miss Ferguson's request. Mr. Polhill-Turner is going out to take the lead of the Tibetan Mission Band.

Mr. Josiah Spiers is now working in Dundee, where he has been rejoiced to meet many who were brought to Christ during his visit, sixteen years ago to that town. He has just brought out the fifth edition of TRUE STORIES (8d.), which has been much used of God in the conversion of young people. Copies may be ordered of the author, 13A, Warwick-lane, E.C.

R. C. Morgan and Family return heartfelt thanks for all the kindness and sympathy they have received in their recent sorrow. By medical advice Mr. Morgan is to spend the winter in South Africa. He will sail on Saturday in the "Union" ss. Moor, in company with Rev. A. and Mrs. Murray. Will our readers add to their kindness by remembering them in prayer?

Miss Cusack (the Nun of Kenmare), is about to give in Brighton, in December and January, a series of Protestant addresses, beginning in Emmanuel Church Room (Rev. J. R. Gregory), and in the Congregational schools of Rev. A. Norris and A. Spong. Prayer is desired that physical strength may be granted to Miss Cusack. Her address is 26, Brunswick-road, Brighton.

Mr. J. Bennett Anderson, on his way home from Australia, landed at Cape Town on October 30, where he has since been evangelising in Cape Town, Wynberg, and Wellington. He may possibly visit Johannesburg and Cape Elizabeth, remaining in South Africa till the end of January. Letters with regard to future service in this country may be addressed to Mrs. Bennett Anderson, 24, Alderson-road, Wavertree, Liverpool.

Mr. G. H. Krikorian, whose present address is 115, Mansfield-road, Hampstead, is an Armenian pastor, detained in this country on his way from Northfield until matters are sufficiently settled for him to return to his church in Yozgat, situated in the ancient Galatia. His work there is very successful and healthy. He has introduced the Christian Endeavour movement, the Kindergarten, and other modern methods of work. He is anxious to raise means of livelihood, and would be thankful to give lectures on Oriental customs, illustrated by costumes, etc. If any of your readers could arrange for meetings, it would be a double kindness. He is well able to instruct and interest. F. B. MEYER.

"CARING FOR THE WIDOWS."

DEAR SIR,—You were good enough to insert a letter of mine suggesting that Christians should have widows' houses nearly or wholly self-supporting, instead of driving them to the workhouse.

This suggestion has met with much approval. But several seem to think they must wait for a society to start such houses.

But the value of this plan is that it does not need a society to start it.

Let each congregation in a populous district, who have widows whom they wish to help, lease a house at a low rent, where widows could have a room. One Christian widow could do the cooking, if necessary, and "mind" the children if the mothers are obliged to be out at work.

The advantages would be—

(1) Respectable home for widows.

(2) Saving of rent to them, as there would be no middleman's profits.

(3) Saving of expense in firing, as there might be common kitchen, and coals laid in at summer prices.

(4) Christian supervision for mothers and children.

In many cases Boards of Guardians might be induced to pay rent for widows instead of placing them into the workhouse and making a race of pauper children. In any case the widows would pay a lower rent than usual, as profit would not be sought by the promoters of the widows' house.

If they could not pay, but were receiving charity money, that money would go further and have better result than if unconditionally given, and perhaps used for drink. With care the widows' house might be made self-supporting.—Yours, RADSTOCK.

Mayfield, Woolston, Southampton.

A WIDOW of fifteen years' experience, who has learned much by personal endurance, seeing, besides, as a mission worker in a large city, much of the sufferings of widows, writes in reference to Lord Radstock's former letter. She is most thankful he has been led to ventilate the subject, while she ventures to suggest a slight modification of his plan. In the early stages of widowhood (she says) the widow is usually well looked after, but the novelty wears off, and her needs are forgotten when another and newer widow appears. In dwellings such as suggested this would largely be obviated, inasmuch as the merits of each case would be known. As to the Christian woman in charge, she should be a total abstainer (in view of the ills wrought by strong drink among these stricken women), and all the better if able to lead a mothers' meeting.

As to the suggestion that "there should be but one kitchen fire for the whole house," our correspondent points out that the house-keeper could not have all the women cooking in her own room, and therefore the kitchen must be apart therefrom. If possible, the poor widows, especially if they have children, ought to have two rooms each.

THE CURATIVE TREATMENT of habitual drunkards is likely to be taken up by the Government in Austria. It is proposed to establish retreats, where inmates shall be received for two years. They may enter of their own accord or be placed there under compulsion. The period of retention may be curtailed to one year, the patient being released on a system resembling that of ticket of leave. If a patient is shown to be incurable he may be retained for life.—The Hospital.

ADULT SCHOOL MOVEMENT.—Last month a school for men was started under the presidency of Mr. William Noble, and on Saturday, November 30th, a public meeting was held in Hoxton Hall, for the purpose of bringing the work before the men of Hoxton and district. Prior to the public meeting a number of men sat down to tea; many of these joined the school the following morning. It is proposed to establish on Monday evenings in the lower hall, a savings bank, sick benefit and coal clubs, and other agencies in connection with this effort.

The Book World.

A PLEA FOR TIBET.

The Great Closed Land, by Annie W. Marston (2s. and 3s. Partridge & Co.), is a powerful plea for Tibet, of which many will welcome the second edition, furnished with excellent maps of the country and the districts from which missionary operations are being conducted. In the preface Miss Marston rejoices in evidences of growing interest in Tibet, and adds:—

"The new trading centre at Yatong, which it was hoped by some might prove to be an opening for the Christian missionary, as well as for the Indian trader, has been declared open only to merchants. Two members of the Church of Scotland have visited the place, which they found guarded by a fortified barrier, erected by the Chinese. Their approach having been reported to the authorities, a military escort was sent to meet them, and to conduct them on the following day to the Sikkim frontier. They were given plainly to understand that for the Christian teacher the land was as fast 'closed' as ever.

"'Faith and patience' must still be the policy of all border missionaries. Even into the state of Sikkim, between India and Tibet, no traveller is now allowed to enter without a Government pass. But our eyes are unto Him who openeth and no man shutteth, who bringeth the princes of the earth to nothing, who maketh the devices of the people of none effect."

Beautifully illustrated, these pages give a deeply interesting description of a peculiar people. The introduction by Rev. B. La Trobe, secretary of the Moravian Missionary Society, reminds us of the long-continued efforts of that Society on the frontiers of Tibet.

Matthew Arnold; his poetry and his message, forms No. 26 of Mr. W. T. Stead's Masterpiece Library. We are glad to know that this "Penny Poets" series has had an immense circulation. The introductory chapters of this number are extremely able.

The half-yearly volume of Cottage Gardening (2s 6d. Cassell & Co.), edited by W. Robinson, is indeed a household treasure to the wife with healthy and artistic tastes. It has a wealth of useful advice on matters not directly pertaining to the garden. The floral plates are gems of colour printing.

The Little Busybody's Painting Book, illustrated by Jessie Currie (6d. Jarrold & Sons), will be an invaluable adjunct to the nursery. On one side are coloured pictures, and on the other outlines to be filled in with the proper chalks or pigments. Just the thing for the rainy days.

Little Eyebright. By Agnes Giberne. (1s. 6d. Shaw & Co.) Euphrasia, the heroine of this story, certainly has for a time her "pund o' care"; with one consent all seems to go awry, but the discipline is profitable, and in the end "all's well." The story is well written and interesting.

Our Own Magazine. (Vol. for 1895. 2s. 13*a*, Warwick-lane, E.C.) This monthly organ of the Children's Special Service Mission maintains its freshness and vitality. Its able staff of lady writers provide a full supply of capital narratives, which are well illustrated. The supplement, containing reports of the year's seaside work, is most welcome.

The Boys' Own Paper "Christmas Number" is a wonderful sixpennyworth of interesting reading. The contents of this serial account for its popularity. The same may be said of the Girls' Own "Christmas Number." It is a collection of seasonable items, attractive to women of riper years as well as to young folks.

From Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. come two children's books: Roseacre; or, Teddie's Inheritance (2s.), in which the interest is well sustained from first to last; and Marcia's Home, the story of some lively children, left too much to themselves, getting into all manner of trouble, and led right at last by their cousin Marcia.

Stories from English History: From Richard III. to Charles I. By Rev. A. J. Church, M.A. (2s. 6d. Seeley & Co.) A capital book, the second of the useful "First Lesson" series. Young people who read history in this version are likely to remember what they read. The illustrations are numerous and good.

Truth in Story, by Edwin Hodder, is a volume of simple home discourses for young people. It will prove of real service to Christian parents and workers among the young. Historical incidents and illustrations from life are employed to enforce great truths and principles; and already the book is in its second edition. (2s. 6d. Hodder Brothers.)

Out with the Old Voyagers. By H. G. Groser. (Andrew Melrose.) These illustrated narratives of the daring achievements of bygone nautical explorers are a capital amalgam of history and of adventure. Columbus, Magellan, Frobisher, Drake, Hawkins, Hudson, and other great captains of discovery find their due niche in this temple of fame.

Gates of Imagery; or, Anecdotal and other Illustrations of Religious Truth. By Rev. J. Marrat. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) A volume of incidents and stories, answering the description of the title, and so grouped under headings as to be easily sought and readily found. The collection is the outcome of independent reading and observation, and will be welcome to preachers and teachers.

Deaf and Dumb Signs (6d.).—Miss E. M. Baskett has prepared a pocket manual of signs and alphabets in use by the deaf and dumb, her special aim being to help hearing Christians to communicate with those who, by their affliction, are cut off from ordinary privileges. She believes it to be "the only book out which shows the various movements, with an index to help to explain." It certainly seems likely to be of real service. Davidson, 79, George-street, Edinburgh, or E. M. B., 49, Penge-road, South Norwood, S.E.

The Epistle of Paul to the Ephesians, with introduction and notes by Professor J. S Candlish, D.D., of the Free Church College, Glasgow, is a very useful addition to the series of "Handbooks for Bible Classes and Private Students." (1s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.) The A.V. is given in the text, but in the notes the R.V. is used to obvious advantage. Those who cannot possess or consult large commentaries, will be glad of this compact little work, which is the result of much labour and thought on the part of its author.

The Prophet Priest: Four addresses delivered at Mildmay Conference, 1895. By Rev. Andrew Murray. (1s. and 1s. 6d. J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay Park, N.). Those who heard these addresses on Christ and his offices will value them in book form, and all who know the author will wish to read them. The volume is issued for the benefit of the Mildmay institutions, which are described in an appendix. Colonel Morton, superintendent and treasurer, supplies a preface, and an excellent photograph of Mr. Murray is given as a frontispiece. All these interesting features should ensure for this little work a large circle of readers.

Life's By-ways and Waysides. By J. R. Miller, D.D. (3s. 6d. Nelson & Sons.) Dr. Miller's pen is most prolific, but his writing is of that sort of which we cannot have too much. It lacks nothing of spirituality of tone, but to that is wedded a simple and homely practicality that commends it greatly to the common people. This collection of somewhat stray chapters will prove a delightful companion for quiet and restful half-hours of leisure. To quote the author's own words in the preface, the book will give "impulse, cheer, encouragement, and hope" to souls hungering after a close daily walk with the Master. A pretty booklet from the same sanctified mind is For a Busy Day (6d. nett.), a delightful exposition of verses from Psalm 143.

Penological and Preventive Principles, by William Tallack, secretary of the Howard Association, is a work of sterling worth; therefore, we welcome the second and enlarged edition, just published (price 8s.) by Wertheimer, Lea & Co., Circus-place, London Wall, E.C. This edition contains several new sections, and has special reference to Europe and America. It deals with crime and pauperism, their treatment and prevention; prisons and their substitutes; habitual offenders, conditional liberation, sentences, capital punishment; intemperance, prostitution, neglected youth, education, police. All who want up-to-date facts, and a careful discussion of principles on these important subjects, should study Mr. Tallack's very useful work.

W. P. Lockhart: Merchant and Preacher. Compiled by his wife. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) The late Mr. Lockhart was a man of very marked individuality; he was cast in no common mould. This memoir has been most admirably compiled by his wife, and the reader sees the man as he was—the rejoicing, out-and-out Christian; the famous athlete; the ardent business man; the fervid and successful evangelist, and the faithful city pastor. His life was a wonderfully full and blessed one; and this record of it, framed with much literary ability, as well as judicious impartiality, will do much to perpetuate the influence he exerted on his generation. We warmly commend it to the perusal of all young men who would live a noble and useful life.

For their Sakes I Sanctify Myself: Sermon and addresses by H. B. Macartney, M.A. (3s. 6d. Shaw.) Mr. Macartney needs no introduction to our readers, many of whom have heard of his noble work in Melbourne, and some of whom heard his voice during a recent visit to this land. This collection of addresses and expositions is marked by fresh and vigorous thought, intense fervour, and a keen insight into spiritual truths. As Mr. H. Edwards says in a prefatory word, we have here—"Ten scriptural, able, and brilliant sermons.....on the solemn subject of holiness, revealing tender love, both to Christ and to souls." Beginning with a communion address on "Foundation Stones," the reader is led "Up Higher," to a study of "The Germ of Life," "Christ our Life," and other lofty yet practical themes. We trust the book may have the ready sale it so well merits.

Bishop Ridley on the Lord's Supper: being "A Brief Declaration of the Lord's Supper," written by Nicholas Ridley, Bishop of London, reprinted, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, and prefaced by a Life of the writer by H. C. G. Moule, D.D., principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge. (5s. Seeley & Co.) This is a volume of peculiar interest. Dr. Moule's biographical sketch is a hearty appreciation; the reprint exhibits all the signs of having been executed with care; and the notes are learned and helpful. Moreover, this is a book for the times. Protestant controversialists will see strong positions admirably maintained, and all must be charmed with the boldness of the man who, in troublous times, witnessed unto blood for Scripture truth against Romish error and superstition. The biographical outline reminds us that while Latimer, his companion in martyrdom, encouraged him to "play the man," Ridley, suffering long agony through the slowness of the burning, ceased not to call upon God to whom he reverently committed his spirit. Furnished with portrait and other illustrations, this reprint has literary interest as well as religious use.

Christmas Cards and Mottoes.

Mr. J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay Park, N., has issued the "Ruby" Motto Cards in ten varieties, different in size and design. Any of them can be localised. He has also brought out some folding cards for Christmas and the New Year, elegant in style and conveying poetical messages selected from some of our most spiritual poets. Some of these are "jewelled," and all are artistically finished. The Ruby Almanack and Text Book comes out for the twelfth year. The contents of this booklet are very precious. Companion publications, envelope size, are Light on the Daily Path, Echoes of Song, and Chimes, each presenting a text and verse for every morning and evening of the month. (2d. each.)

The "Mildmay" Calendars and Motto Cards include some choice varieties. The "Day Spring" Calendar (1s.) consists of six cards of tasteful design and beautifully printed in colours. The "Owl" Calendar (6d.) strikingly warns the observer that "the day is at hand." "Onward and Upward" and "Our Little Ones" are other pretty calendars. "Our Western Highlands" is a series of six sketches (2s.) by E. St. B. H., with Christmas verses on the reverse. "Bud and Brier" and "Forest Voices," are charming series (2s. each) by E. L.: and "Royal Gifts," twelve bright floral cards (2s.), by A. L. The cottage scenes of "English Homesteads" are gay, and there is much to delight in the various smaller series. We must not overlook "The Coolin Hills," twelve book-markers with calendars (2s.). These and the well-known motto cards are published by E. St. B. Holland, at the Deaconess House, Mildmay Park, N., the profits being devoted to the Mildmay institutions. The export agent is Mr. W. H. Lewer, 46, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Kate Greenaway's Kalendar for 1896 is a wall-card, which will please little folks and help their elders. (6d. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.)

The Sovereign "I Wills" of Christ, by Rev. Charles A. Fox, is a booklet full of spiritual beauty and strength. Appended is a stimulating chapter on the Divine Necessity of Missions. (1d. Partridge.)

"Come" and "Go": or, the Invitations and Commands of Christ, by S. E. Burrows, is a booklet which should prove of special service to Christian workers. (1d. Partridge.)

Conversion: Is it Necessary? By Mrs. W. E. Legg. (1d. The Author, 42, Netherhall-gardens, N.W.; Partridge & Co., London.) A booklet of sound spiritual exposition and appeal. It deserves a wide circulation.

Two excellent addresses by Rev. Charles New, of Hastings, have been issued in booklet form by Edward Knight, Middle-street, Aldersgate. They are entitled Christian Assurance and All Need Supplied. (One halfpenny each.)

The China Inland Mission Almanac for 1896 is in the form of a large Chinese scroll, illustrated by portrait of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, and sketches of Chinese scenery, people, etc. The daily texts have been selected on a carefully-prepared plan. (1½d., post free.)

The International Christian Police Association have issued a series of motto and Christmas cards for free distribution among the police. The Christmas cards may be had in French, German, Swedish, Tamil, Urdu, Hindi, and Japanese, as well as English, from the Office, C.P.A., 1a, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C.

The Council of the Missionary Bureau have issued a hitherto unpublished address by C. H. Spurgeon, entitled Our King's Command: "Go Ye." (2d.) The pages should be read by all earnest Christians. Rev. F. B. Meyer's Appeal to Christian Young Men (one halfpenny) is in its twentieth thousand. It has been blessed to many, and we understand that at least a score who are now missionaries decided to witness for Christ among the heathen through its perusal. (Partridge & Co.)

CONSUMPTION.

THE GRAND OLD MEDICINE OF NEARLY 70 YEARS
has maintained its position as the first medicine in all Chest Complaints.

As a preventative of mischief, it should be taken at the first appearance of Cough or Cold. As a safeguard against Influenza, and in subsequent weakness of the lungs, it has been used with wonderful results.

Ministers and Public Speakers have declared it to be invaluable for hoarseness, and "Splendid for the Voice."

So, also, in Asthma, it has been the means of wonderful relief.

But the renown of this celebrated medicine in all these cases has been eclipsed by its success in cases of
PHTHISIS PULMONALIS, or CONSUMPTION,
Aptly called the "Scourge of England."

Interviews with patients, new and old, by Mr. Congreve's Commissioner, are published every alternate week in most of the weekly journals.

Mr. Congreve's book on Consumption and Chest Diseases may be had post free for one shilling, from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

Congreve's Balsamic Elixir may be had of all Medicine Vendors, or direct from the Proprietor (see the book).

Notes and Comments.

☞ WILL those of our readers who receive THE CHRISTIAN direct from ourselves or our Postal Agents by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially missionaries and others in foreign countries?

As the time draws near for our friends to disburse their Christmas gifts, we would put in a plea for the numerous older societies and mission agencies whose long and faithful service has made possible and easy the foundation of those of later date which are doing excellent work by their side. Workers of the present generation owe much to those who have sown that they may reap; and we trust that in the practical sympathy of our readers "he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together."

Encouraged by "the spirit of grace and of supplication" vouchsafed in 1893 and 1894, the trustees of the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, have again issued a call to united prayer and praise on Tuesday, December 17. Meetings will be held at the hall at 4 and 7 p.m. We trust many will endeavour to mark their fellowship and appreciation of the work by being present at one or both meetings.

We would call the attention of our London readers to the all-day conference in St. Martin's Hall, Charing Cross, to-morrow (Friday), on the opium question. The speakers will represent all the phases of this subject, so vital to our national honour, and the highest welfare of the peoples of India and China. We trust there will be large attendances, morning, afternoon, and evening.

The state of things in Turkey goes from bad to worse, and the prospect of any alteration for the better is as distant as ever. The feeling of indignation, and the desire to see something definite done by our own Government, are becoming stronger every day. The hand of Government may be forced if news of further outrage comes. And yet war would mean greater horrors than anything we have hitherto heard of.

On the subject of Christian Unity, "J. L." writes :—

The divisions among Christians arise mainly, if not wholly, from one or two of the following causes :—(1) Not receiving the Scriptures simply and entirely in all their plain statements of a truth or subject; (2) insisting dogmatically on certain points, or particular views of them, which are not explicitly revealed and decided in Scripture—

In other words, the evil arises from depreciating the Word of God on the one hand, or going beyond it on the other.

The air we breathe is composed of two gases, and may be separated into its component parts. But when so separated it is no longer atmospheric air. Our Lord Jesus Christ is God manifested in flesh; He is the Word made flesh; He is Son of God and Son of Man. But if in our conception of Him we separate Him into two natures, and think of Him as acting, or suffering, or glorified, in his human nature apart from his Divine nature, or in his Divine nature apart from his human nature, have we not, so far as our thinking is concerned, put asunder what God has joined, and explained away our Lord and Saviour Himself? It is John, whose Gospel is characteristically that of the Son of God, who gives us that intensely human touch, "Jesus therefore being weary with his journey, sat thus on the well."

The Prince of Wales at his own initiative, presided at the dinner-party of past and present Trinity College, Cambridge men, on Monday evening in the Whitehall Rooms, with the purpose of bringing into public notice and sympathy the Trinity College Mission in South London, and of further enlisting help "towards a successful experiment in practical mission work." The south of London is the favoured area for Cambridge missions. Already St. John's, Clare, Pembroke, Corpus Christi, and Caius, as well as Trinity, are hard at work. The last-mentioned mission has already a lay settlement under its patronage and support. It has been ten years at work, and is worthy of notice for its practical results. Naturally, now that Royalty has taken up the matter, the movement is not likely to lack support. But it is Heaven's Royalty alone that can give true success. "Paul planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase."

Canon Barnett is dissatisfied with the growth of the Settlement idea in the poorer districts of the inner ring of London. Twelve years have elapsed since Toynbee Hall was founded, and yet among the 1,000,000 inhabitants of East London, there are still only three Settlements. Helpers, resident or occasional, are hard to get, and this throws the burden on a few willing shoulders, overtaxing their strength and spirits. This is disappointing, but not, we think, altogether surprising.

There is something vague about them. It is hard to "place" them. They occupy a kind of middle position between strictly religious and strictly educational institutions. Neither churches, nor mission halls, nor polytechnics, nor clubs, they yet have something of each in them. We believe their future depends more than some of their promoters think, on making the distinctly religious appeal more prominent. There should be a church membership of some kind, thoroughly "undenominational," but uncompromisingly spiritual in its character. Loyalty to Jesus Christ as the Saviour, should be made the touchstone both of workers and converts. Then the "churches" would be more whole-hearted in their support, and the number of devoted helpers would increase. At the latest of these settlements (Browning Hall, Walworth), Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Stead retain and emphasise the element of church membership in its programme. Wherever this is done, the workers may rely on the practical help of their friends in their endeavour to evangelise the crowded district in which they work.

The Rock points out a good sign in the religious life of Oxford University in the growth of the College Bible Readings among undergraduates; in several colleges the number has increased from six or seven to twenty, or more. There is, however, a drawback. Undergraduates shrink from taking the charge of large meetings, and hence some clergyman from the outside is called in—perhaps not over sympathetic—and the reading is supplanted by an address. Though the meetings remain devotional and prayer is offered, the old happy study of the Bible together is sacrificed. This is a heavy loss—intimate knowledge of Scripture is jeopardised—the quickening power of the Word itself upon the heart is lost—so, too, is the quiet unconscious training of men for future evangelistic work.

It is growing clearer day by day that the controversy regarding religious teaching in Board Schools is going to be sharp and bitter. The floodgates of sectarian feeling are probably to be let loose, and we shall soon be on its troubled waters. What will be the issue, no man can tell. Let us pray that love for the common Master, who is served alike by many of those ranged in conflict on opposite sides, will preserve us from unworthiness of speech and thought. These questions of policy, and ways and means, and methods, are matters of judgment, and should be treated as such. It ought to be possible to disagree on such questions, and to fight hard for our convictions, without misunderstanding each other's motives, and with all respect for each other's sincerity. Christian men ought to know how to differ without bitterness, and while far removed in thought, to preserve "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

At the annual meeting of the Council of the Free Churches, held November 25, "it was decided to hold a meeting to protest against the prolonged hesitation of the European Powers to stop the murderous work of the Turkish authorities in Armenia." It has been settled that this meeting should take place on Tuesday, the 17th inst., at the City Temple, and Dr. Clifford, writing in Saturday's papers, appeals for special prayer to be offered up next Sunday for the success of the meeting, and for the cause in whose interests it is to be held. "While the diplomatists debate, the people perish" Civilised history has recorded nothing more terrible than the deadlock in the negotiations, while the Sultan tries to prop up his tottering throne by the extermination of a large section of his most peaceable and worthy subjects. The only resource left to those whose hearts are with the oppressed is to appeal to a Higher Power than those of Europe, whose patience with the evil ways of men is great, but whose will in the end must be done.

Diplomacy, and all the machineries of civilised pressure, have failed; let us, as we should have done at first, see what prayer to the God of Heaven can do.

Dr. Amory Bradford, who went out to Japan to see whether the Churches there were strong enough to stand alone, has come to the conclusion that they cannot yet do without missionaries, but that only men of ability, well trained, and with a special aptitude for languages, should seek Japan as a field of labour. The Japanese are often thinkers and readers, and can only be aided by able men. Dr. Bradford had reliable testimony that the labours of the missionaries have put new life into Buddhism and Shintoism, very much as they have revived the ancient religions of India, but only to slay them. The paganism of ancient Rome was quickened under Julian the Apostate into a spasmodic vigour, but its end was come. So will it be with the false religions of to-day.

Miss M. McLean, known to many of our readers through her work among Japanese, and more recently in association with the Conference Hall, Eccleston-square, S.W., has been visiting from house to house among Scotch villagers in the vicinity of Polmont. She is impressed with the ready welcome afforded her. Again and again she has been assured, "This is just what the like o' us needs!" "We dinna get the like o' this ilka day!" This sort of work knits human hearts together, cheering the visitor very often quite as much as it benefits those visited. There is no more useful adjunct to the public services of the Lord's Day than such private visitation by sympathetic and tactful members of the congregation. Great blessing is lost to the Church of Christ by its lack.

An important question in connection with licensing reform is about to be tried in the High Court. A resident in Dover, having strongly opposed the renewal of several public house licences at the Brewster Sessions, one of them was refused by the magistrates. The owners appealed to the Quarter Sessions, when the decision of the magistrates was not only upset, but the entire costs of the brewers were saddled on Mr. Boulter, the objecting citizen, who did not appear when the case was heard on appeal. The Dover Temperance Council, having obtained a strong legal opinion that this action as to the costs is ultra vires, are seeking to having the question definitely settled, and the case will soon be heard in the Court of Queen's Bench. The point at issue is one of deep and vital importance to all temperance reformers, and a fund is being raised to meet the heavy legal expenses. Mr. H. Bazett, 7, Gladstone-terrace, Dover, is hon. sec. of the local Temperance Council.

Our soldiers have lately been receiving a great deal of notice; every precaution has been taken to send them comfortably to Africa, and to guard them there from the dangers into which we are forcing them. But what about the soldiers' wives? Some are cared for, but those married "off the strength" have generally a bad time of it, especially when their husbands go campaigning. A correspondent in one of our military centres writes:—

> This town has an unusual share of soldiers' wives off the strength, all half starved; and so little is done for them. Little or no work is now given out to them. The soldiers, who have plenty of food, are cared for, whilst the women are passed over. One of the Soldiers' Homes here gave away forty tickets to the men this week, and only three of them appeared, whilst those half-fed women would have been so glad of a good tea.

No doubt these Homes could now give attention to the wives. And the more so as our correspondent proceeds:—"So many of the women call upon me for help; it is very pitiful to hear them say that for want of food they are driven to do wrong." Every campaign is carried out at a moral cost that cannot be computed.

Everyone will wish well to Lord James in his attempts to arbitrate between masters and men in the shipbuilding troubles. His decision will be looked for with the hope that both sides may see their way clear to accept it. So far we have not been able to see any difference so serious that a little patience might not have smoothed it away. Any difference looks huge when the feeling of antagonism is strong, or self-will is in the ascendant. Only let conscience and reason come into play, and feeling be subdued, and all will go well.

The case of girl-waiters in some coffee houses must be very bad if the recent revelations at a police-court be an index. A girl was kept at work until one in the morning, and had to be down again at half-past four. The helplessness of these victims is complete. They are too busy trying to get a few shillings to keep body and soul together to do anything in the way of self-defence. They go on from day to day like dumb driven cattle. And the thousands round about them, who might help them, are also too busy with their urgent duties to notice and inquire into their condition. It is only when some incident occurs that a flash of light is poured upon the hideous system.

The ways and sayings of children are obtaining much attention, even their views on life and things are read with a good deal of amused interest. Professor Sully has devoted a book to "Studies in Childhood," in which the peculiarities of the child are fully set forth. Children seem to be specially opposed to the thought of God's omniscience. And no wonder, if it is ever put in the light in which we once heard an old school superintendent put it. "If you do anything wrong, God will see you; He'll be a-spyin' of you through the keyhole." Children should know that God is an all-observing Friend, not a mean spy. Let them think of Him as Light and Love, and learn to walk in Him.

The Roman Catholics have no sense of shyness in pressing their claims upon the Government for the use of public money in educating their children, while public control of the schools is repudiated. The Duke of Norfolk, a member of the Government, and the Lord Chief Justice have both openly thrown their influence on this sectarian side. It is said that a million of the surplus which the Chancellor of the Exchequer will have at the end of the year will go in the direction of sectarian school teaching, misnamed voluntary school teaching. The High Church party is strongly on that side, and, of course, so far as it sympathises with Rome, so far will it be pleased for Rome to gain. The whole of the Irish Roman Catholics in the House of Commons will go for this measure—an enormous endowment of the Roman Catholic faith and the handing over of tens of thousands of Protestant children to Romanising clergy.

Rev. W. J. Woods, Secretary of the Congregational Union, who, with Dr. Barrett, has returned from a visit to Jamaica, was greatly struck with the joyousness of the Christians there. The text, "Rejoicing in the Lord alway"—had new light thrown upon it. The joyousness, he thinks, is all the more remarkable, because the people are very poor. "With a single exception, there is not a man in those churches who is worth more than £200 a year." It appears that the fertility of the soil is, in one respect, a hindrance to their Christian life, as they obtain their livelihood too easily. It is a pity that they do not add industry to joy, and thus support themselves better than they appear to do; but, again, there may be some conditions of which we do not know, or which we fail to appreciate.

Events seem to be shaping favourably for the continuance and spread of Protestant Christianity in Madagascar, for the first Resident General is a Protestant. The French will undoubtedly find it to be their safest policy to trust the missionaries, who will honestly refrain from all political action, and allow them to go on with the religious work which brought them to the island. It is souls they want to win for their Saviour, and the more they win the more stable will any form of right government become. France has a large body of Christians to study, the best of its new subjects, and no good can come of arousing their jealousy and fear. Who knows whether a tide of Christian influence may not flow back into France from her newest and largest colony?

The Governor of Virginia proposes that for the stamping-out of lynching there should be an Act passed imposing a fine of 200 dollars per 1,000 inhabitants in each city or county where lynching may occur, increased grants for assuring the better protection of prisoners, and a concession to molested prisoners of the right to sue for damages if they survive the assaults; or should they perish, the same right to be allowed to their heirs or widows. This is the right principle—make the whole community responsible for the acts of individuals or groups of individuals. A wholesome public opinion would soon be formed under the action of such a law, and America would not only be freed from a great reproach, but a better feeling would grow up towards coloured persons. We trust the Governor of Virginia will persist with his proposal, and carry it to a successful issue. This would be the best atonement for Virginia's sin in hanging brave John Brown.

Every position brings its own temptations. Instance the danger which threatens the preacher of falling into professionalism. The more earnest in work, the greater the danger. The necessity of preparing two or three sermons a week keeps the mind busy in search of subjects; and even when reading the Word of God for personal benefit, thoughts of the pulpit will intrude. Words which flame like the Bush of Midian with the presence of the Lord, and which might be of untold personal blessing, are also seductively suggestive of homiletic material.

So also in prayer. It is only natural that when some plaintive cry is wrought out of the soul's longings, thoughts of the devotions of the sanctuary should immediately arise. The minister may usurp the place of the man, and the public office invade the sanctity of private devotion. And this so insidiously that it is possible not to realise in it a danger at all. Our own vineyard must be well kept. He who would bless others must first himself be blessed. He can lead souls no nearer to God than he himself is near.

The Discipline of the Tongue.

BY THE LATE DR. R. W. DALE.*

The tongue can no man tame. . . . Therewith bless we the Lord and Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the likeness of God; out of the same mouth cometh forth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be.—James iii. 8-10.

I THINK that most of us must feel that James had a far graver sense of the moral and religious importance of words than is common even among Christian people. For him, words are deeds; they are decisive tests of the real quality of life. He had laid to heart the solemn declaration of our Lord that "every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof at the day of judgment. For by thy words"—not by thy actions alone—"thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

I suppose that if we are to discipline the tongue, we must, first of all, endeavour to make real to ourselves the seriousness of speech. We should think about it day after day, until by God's grace we feel as we have never felt before, that our words are really a very large part of our moral life. For example, we should think of the suffering which has been inflicted on ourselves by careless and bitter words; of the injury which we know that such words have done to other men. We should think of words which have stung us to passion; of words which have filled our imagination with foul shapes, that haunted us day by day and refused to be banished; of words which have shaken our faith in God and destroyed our comfort in his love.

We should think of words which have created unjust suspicion of the integrity or the sobriety of other men, and have led to the loss of the confidence of their employers, and to the ruin of their families. We should think of the wretched whisperers who have quenched the love of wives for their husbands, and of husbands for their wives. We should think of how we ourselves have been misled and involved in serious troubles by the careless inaccuracy of the words of men whom we trusted. In every way that we can we should try to bring home to ourselves the truth that words which are lightly spoken may be a grave offence against justice and against charity.

We should further consider seriously the great warning of our Lord, that for every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account in the day of judgment. "Idle words" are words that are spoken carelessly, indolently, without any moral effort to avoid sin; if they are sinful our moral insensibility to their sinfulness will be no excuse for them. These are words against which Christian people have to watch most carefully. When challenged about them, they say they never thought that what they said would do any harm; but it was because they never thought, that their words were idle words. They say they never meant any harm, but they did harm; and if they had considered what they were saying they would never have said it.

And if for "idle words" we must give account in the day of judgment—and Christ Himself, who warns us, will be the Judge—much more shall we give account of words which are not idle, careless, thoughtless; but which are deliberately false, uncharitable, and revengeful. And even if, through God's grace, we are not shut out of the City of God, false words, uncharitable words, revengeful words, idle words, that pained and wronged other men, will impoverish our eternal reward and lessen our eternal joy.

* Extracted from THE EPISTLE OF JAMES, and other discourses. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) In these singularly practical pages we have a striking echo of a voice that was ever ready to be lifted up on behalf of righteousness in life. Here we have not only some of the latest utterances of the great Birmingham Nonconformist bishop, but a splendid commentary on the teachings of the ethical apostle. The ten sermons contained in the second half of the volume are chiefly expositions of fundamental doctrine.

The Reality of God.

THE world, upon whose surface we live, belongs to God. The sunshine in which we bask, the air that we breathe, and the teeming life around us are all his property. He created them, and by his power they are sustained. By virtue of his unique relationship to the universe, all created things, both animate and inanimate, are indisputably his. He is, in the most absolute sense, Owner and Master.

The great majority of the people in our land profess to believe all this, and one could not offer to them a grosser insult than to suggest otherwise. And yet to a vast number God is, to all intents and purposes, as if He were not. They make no reference to Him; their literature scarcely ever contains even the mention of his Name; their plans are formed with no thought of asking his permission, or seeking his counsel. They profess to believe that God rules in the kingdom of men, and that all earthly rulers are subservient to Him; yet if it were seriously proposed to commence a political campaign with prayer for Divine direction, the idea would be promptly snubbed. Their science books spell "Creator" with a small c, and "science" with a capital S. Yet in some way these people believe in God, although He is next to nothing to them. They regard Him practically as an imposing name painted upon an engine, or as a figure-head at the bow of a ship, either of which could be removed without impairing the usefulness of the agency. What a shock such people will have when they are compelled to face the reality of God.

But even amongst ourselves—professing Christians—how little does the thought of the reality of God's nearness impress us! We believe in an Omnipresent God, who is, through Jesus Christ, our Father; that He is ever with us; that we are compassed about by his presence; that He knows us through and through, and that He is ever ready to help us in time of need. Do we really believe all this? Review our mode of life; is it consistent with an honest belief in the real presence of God?

Take the matter of speech, to begin with. What is the general character of our conversation? And what is its special character when we meet with select friends and speak out our thoughts with perfect frankness? The hasty words, the equivocal words, the unkind words, the uncharitable words, and the flattering words which often resound from our lips—could they ever have been uttered if we had honestly believed that God was near by when we spake them?

Proceed to the matter of actions, where the same test may be applied. Examine our conduct under the pure ray of truth. Could this or that ever have been performed had we really believed in an Omniscient God? We often do things under the impression that we are alone and unobserved: it does not strike us as a reality that God is with us. No man could ever be guilty of a petty meanness, or of spreading an unsavoury report, or of committing sin if he realised the fact of the Divine presence.

Finally, penetrate into the region of our inner selves—the place of thought and desire. Here, indeed, the test will be the severest. Self-respect may detain the word prisoner within the lips; fear of discovery may restrain from committing the deadly sin. But, so far as our fellow-men are concerned, we are quite safe in exercising our liberty to the full in the region of our thoughts. The sincerity of our belief in the nearness of God is tested most acutely here. For it is a religious axiom that "the Lord knoweth the thoughts of men." Our desires are as clear to Him as are our expressions to our fellow-men. Now think of the mental pride which we revel in—the mental vindictiveness harboured—the illicit mental projects gloated over. Would men permit this if they really believed in the presence of God?

Now is there any way by which the presence of God may be made more real to us?

That God desires to be real to us cannot for a moment be questioned. On the night before the crucifixion, our Lord, in exposing his choicest treasures to his disciples, declared that if a certain condition was fulfilled, God would "make his abode" with them. In his pathetic appeal to the proud church at Laodicea, Jesus expressed his desire to "come in and sup." St. Paul prayed for Ephesian Christians that "Christ may dwell (permanently) in your hearts by faith"; and a marvellous sentence in the Epistle of St. James represents God as "jealously yearning" for our love. The will of God for his children is perfect union with Himself, which, of course, means that his presence will become to us the greatest of all realities.

But for this to take effect there must be unconditional surrender to Him. God will not force Himself upon us. He only enters upon our invitation. He is responsible for the indwelling, we for the admission of Him. "Complete surrender" is a phrase easy to employ, but its consequences are by no means easy. It is not until we really face the question that its difficulties fully appear. For complete surrender to God means a complete surrender of all loves which have rivalled his, and these rivals do not suffer expulsion without a desperate struggle.

And this surrender to God must be the outcome of a deep conviction that we belong to God by every right. No surrender has value unless it is based upon God's claim to us. Surrender is followed by the continual activity of faith. It may be unaccompanied by sensation. There may be no feeling in the matter. The absence of emotion need not affright us. We may reason thus:—"God desires to dwell in me and to make his presence the fact of my life, his one condition being that I yield myself unreservedly to Him. If I comply with his condition it is not possible that He can fail. From this time on my life's attitude must be quite altered, for God indwells me." Then will follow a very real sense of the Divine presence as the habit of regarding God becomes constant.

What a change will come over that life which realises God! Words, actions, and thoughts will be pure and guarded. Life will be hushed, for God is there. Doubts about God will be blissful impossibilities. Life will be transfigured. Heaven will have begun.

F. C. SPURR.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—At the monthly muster of the "Christian Life-Boat Crew," the text for the month given out was "Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Addresses delivered by Miss Tuck Captain Bray, Captain Blackburne, and others. The crew had been at work during the month in some eleven different mission centres, amongst which was Cambridge, where the Lord greatly owned their efforts.

Rev. Andrew Murray's Farewell.

Thursday last was observed as a Day of United Prayer at Exeter Hall, when large meetings of Christians were presided over by Rev. Andrew Murray, who delivered addresses morning, afternoon, and evening. This being Mr. Murray's last public appearance before his departure for South Africa, on the following Saturday, the proceedings were invested with a peculiar interest. A good while before the time for beginning, the Large Hall was well filled, and a hushed solemnity characterised the gatherings. Mr. Murray had been asked to address meetings in connection with well-known Prayer Unions; and it was hoped by the exercises of this day to meet the desires thus expressed, and to afford an opportunity for Christians of every name to show their oneness in our blessed Lord, and their love one for another—as well as to afford an occasion for stirring up believers to more unceasing united prayer for all saints, that in the power of the One Spirit God's people might be made strong for their witness and work in the world. The morning theme was

LOVE AND FELLOWSHIP.

Mr. Murray delivered a stirring address, based on John xvii. 20-23. There is not, he said, among the people of God, that overflowing love which there should be. The prayer of Jesus amounts to this—"Father, between Thee and Me there never has been anything but love, and I want the same to be the case with my people. Father, I pray that they may be one, as we are one." How wonderful it will be when selfish proud men learn to love as the Father and the Son love, that the world will then be compelled to say, "This is a love which is more than human, and comes from heaven." "Father," says Christ, "It is for this that I have given them the glory which Thou gavest Me, and made them partakers of the Divine nature; therefore I pray for them that they may be made perfect in one, so that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me, and hast loved them as Thou hast loved Me."

Christ's prayer suggests to us that oneness among God's people is to be a reflection of the life of God in heaven. Heaven is a place where the glory of God is perfectly manifest; earth is a place where the reflection of that glory is to be seen. Think of the love of the Father for the Son. He gave Him all that He had. Again, the Son gave all back to his Father, and when He took human form He yielded Himself up for the salvation of the world. This Divine love is to be the pattern and measure of our love to each other. I do not ask whether you have attained to this, but I ask, Have you aimed at it?

Christ poured out the Holy Spirit into the hearts of his disciples that, however unloving they had been, they might love one another as He had loved them. And He gave them the new commandment, that they should love one another.

GOD IS TO EFFECT THE ONENESS,

by the implanting of his own love in our hearts. The reason why there is so little love is because we do not count upon God working in us to will and to do of his good pleasure. The new will of every child of God is, by its very nature, inclined to love God's children. When we try by our own powers to live as we should, we fail, and cannot but do so.

This love and fellowship for which Christ prayed comes in answer to prayer. We should pray every day for the Church of God, for all believers—for those who are our brethren and sisters in Christ. I do not believe that the great revival of love will come until this spirit of prayer is poured into the hearts of God's people. Every thought of Christ ought to be linked with those who constitute his Body. The manifestation of this oneness is to be a proof to the world that God sent Christ. The Lord said, "Hereby, shall all men know that ye are my disciples—(a heavenly people)—if ye have love one to another." Men are to believe in Christ not simply through preaching, but through an exhibition of love. Praise God, there are believers in regard to whom some have said: "We are convinced that God sent Christ, because there is something in this disciple of his which we do not find in other men." Why should there not be more love carrying such conviction? What is required is that the heart should be absolutely given up to God, so that self may be subdued and Divine love flow into the soul. The love of Christ is to love the unworthy. Have we such love that we can love the unloveable—those who are not according to our natural taste? Let us seek the love which Christ will shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, and then, yielding ourselves to God, let us show forth the heavenly love, and plead for all saints.

A season of prayer followed; and in conclusion Mr. Murray invoked the Divine blessing upon believers everywhere, in churches or smaller circles.

THE SECRET OF EFFECTUAL PRAYER.

The afternoon was largely devoted to prayer for London and the world. Special reference was made to the Prayer Union for London, observed every Thursday, by many who have banded themselves together to pray for this great city; for all its inhabitants and for the upper classes; that God would abundantly pour out his Spirit upon them, that they may be saved and sanctified, and that great blessing may be given to the clergy and ministers of London. While, however, this five-million-peopled metropolis was thus borne before God prayer was also made for all Christians, and for the progress of the Gospel in all lands. The proceedings opened with a season of waiting upon God, when Lord Radstock, Mr. T. B. Miller, and others led in prayer.

Rev. Andrew Murray read Rom. viii. 26, 27, and pointed out that in these words we have the secret of effectual prayer. Many complain they have little power for prayer, but the power for prayer is the Holy Ghost, who helpeth our infirmities, making intercession for us.

THE BLESSEDNESS OF IGNORANCE.

We learn here, first, that when we want to discover the secret of effectual prayer, we must begin with a sense of our own ignorance. When a man knows he cannot pray as he ought, and makes confession thereof, the Holy Spirit is ready to come in. There may sometimes be great fluency, and yet profound ignorance of the essentials of true prayer, or of what we should pray for.

Now we must remember that the Holy Spirit cannot come in power as the Spirit of prayer and intercession, unless that thought is deep in our lives that we know not and He knows; that we cannot pray without his teaching. In the great work of intercession our very ignorance is the secret of success if used right.

This, then, is the first step; what is the next? To understand that the Holy Ghost has been given to teach us to pray. Have we learned this solemn lesson: that the Holy Ghost and we are linked together in true prayer? What is needed on our part? Is it not this, that as surrendered souls we yield our whole being to Him, giving ourselves up that He may work in us and teach us how to pray? We have to confess, alas! that some—while true believers, earnest and devoted in many ways—are not surrendered souls, and therefore do not know the blessing of the indwelling Spirit. God grant that all such may claim the blessing now, and thus become true intercessors on behalf of the five millions of London, the hundreds of millions of the heathen, and the numberless nominal professors and half-hearted Christians throughout the churches.

Then we must learn not only the blessedness of ignorance confessed, and the wondrous help of the Holy Spirit, but further we must understand the way in which the Holy Spirit will pray. What is that? "The Spirit maketh intercession with groanings which cannot be uttered." That is, in prayer too deep for words. When prayer rises too easily in flowing words it is often because the depths are not stirred. Again and again we find in our Lord's life evidences of depths which could not be expressed (see Luke xii. 50, John xii. 27, Luke xxii. 44). When the Holy Spirit comes in all the fire of God's love for souls, and of the pity of Christ over perishing men, surely we shall burn as never before with an intensity of desire which shall often express itself in groanings and longings which cannot be uttered in words.

But this being so, how will the answer come? The text shows this, "He that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because He maketh intercession for the saints according to the mind of God." Thus the heart-searcher is needed to find out the meaning of prayer. We may make mistakes, but He cannot.

Now I would have you observe that the Holy Spirit makes intercession for the saints. Note that expression. Some think the words do not refer to those who are prayed for, but rather to the wider thought that it is his work to make supplication for all saints; that He is not confined to one, but dwells in all and intercedes for all who are united to Him by faith. There is nothing delights Him more than to fill us with love for all saints. We may differ very seriously from some; we may even think they are are doing grave injury to the Church, but we should pray for them. We are so apt to limit our prayers to our own circle and interests, and forget that it is our privilege to pray for all saints. Remember, our King maketh intercession for us. If you heard of a king on earth who not only ruled well, but spent his time in praying for his people, you would sound abroad his piety and godliness. But our King intercedes for us, and it is ours to pray with Him as fellow intercessors. How much have we given up for Him and for this? Someone expressed the hope this day might be "A Day with Christ in the School of Prayer." God grant it may be so. Let us seek that He may so link us to Himself that we may pray as He has given us by his Holy Spirit.

The next half-hour was spent in earnest supplication; amongst those who led therein being Revs. E. W. Moore and Charles A. Fox, and Mr. A. A. Head.

WORKING AND WAITING.

An audience fully representative, crowded Exeter Hall for the final meeting in the evening. All the members of the London Y.M.C.A. committees had been specially invited to tea at six o'clock, with the view of afterwards hearing our visitor's last address.

After a season of song and prayer, Mr. Murray gave his address on the subject announced—"Working and Waiting"—the text being the well-known verses at the close of Isaiah xl.: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint." All that we have been asking God to do for us in the earlier parts of the day (he said) must manifest itself in new work, and more work, and better work. It is not always more in quantity that is wanted; but the quality of the work must be different. It is not needful to say so much about working, as about the secret of strength for work. There is promised and prepared for us as God's children a Divine strength; but how many of us are unconscious of it? And just as the word work means so much earthward and manward, so the word wait means everything Godward. Our work towards men will be entirely dependent on our waiting upon God.

LESSONS FROM THE EAGLE.

Most of us have heard sermons or read expositions on this text; let me give you two or three very simple thoughts about it. Take this phrase: "They shall mount up with wings as eagles." The eagle is called the king of birds. He is said to fly the highest of all birds, and to go straight for the sun. The eagle is taken here to be an image of God's children. Why are we to mount up with eagle's wings? To carry us up into the heavens. Christian! you are a heavenly man; you are to live a heavenly life. God, who created the eagle with his wings to rise heavenward, gives to the Christian wings by which he can rise too. But alas! how many Christians are bound and chained to the earth. When I was in Switzerland I saw a splendid eagle, but it was chained to a rock. There was the king of birds, meant to soar into heaven, bound to this earth! That is the life of multitudes of believers. Are you allowing business, or the pleasures of the world, or the flesh to chain you down, so that you cannot rise? God forbid it should be so.

You ask: "How can I get these eagle's wings?" I answer: "How did the eagle get its wings?" It was born a royal eagle, and it got its wings at its birth. So the children of God are born with eagle's wings; but alas! they know it not. This truth is not sufficiently preached, or the knowledge of it sufficiently sought from God. As children of God we have within us a Divine nature—the very Spirit of Christ Jesus, to draw us heavenward. But how many believers there are who do not know this, or who just barely know it; they do not accept it and rejoice in it. How many there are who begin by having an inkling of it, but who prove unfaithful and turn back to the world again.

Perhaps you say, "If I have these eagle's wings I have never learnt to use them. How am I to use them?" In Deuteronomy xxxii. 11, 12, Moses says: "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him." (After a vivid description of the way in which a parent eagle rouses its young to attempt their first flight, the speaker proceeded):—God made the eagle with that instinct, and it is nothing but a picture of God's own heart. How does He teach his eaglet children to use their wings? He stirs up their nest, sometimes by a trying providence, by a death, a sickness, a loss, by some tribulation or temptation. And just as when the eaglet is ready to sink down and perish, the mother comes underneath and bears it up, so the everlasting arms are stretched out to support and carry the soul that feels it is ready to sink under the trouble. God calls on the soul to trust Him. And as the eaglet trusts the mother to carry it, my God asks me to trust Him. The mother takes out the eaglet again and again, so that it begins to take courage; till at last it can soar forth, having learned completely to use its wings. God longs to teach his children thus to mount on eagle's wings, and He does it by stirring up the nest. He sees that a worker's wings are not being used. The worker may be very earnest, and perhaps there has been blessing; but somehow self-will, or the power of the flesh, comes in, and we learn to trust in ourselves. God stirs up the nest, and the worker is led to think, perhaps, that God has forsaken him. Then comes the blessed message: No, your Father loves you, but there is one thing He misses about you; you are not heavenly enough. He wants you to have closer fellowship and communion with Himself.

"They shall renew their strength." Strength is the mark of the eagle's wings. So God wants his children to be so strong that they can live above the world, and can say to the men of this world,

"I AM LIVING IN ANOTHER WORLD."

That is the great mark of the true disciples of Jesus Christ, that they are not of the world, as He was not of the world; in the midst of the business of the world they are to live heavenly lives.

The idea of strength is the great idea of this text and this chapter, "Hast thou not known, hast thou not heard that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary?" Weary worker, have you known this, that the everlasting God never is weary? If He is never weary, you need never be weary, because your God is your strength. You have no strength but what He gives, and you may have all the strength that He can give. I find that if there is one lesson that we need to learn—it is the lesson of our own impotence. Just as much as we are dependent on God for righteousness in our justification, are we dependent on the strength of God alone for sanctification.

Where do we get this power to use our wings and to soar heavenward? In waiting upon God. Think what this waiting on God is. I want to give you this as my parting word. First of all, if you are to wait on God, you must know God. All our waiting on Him will depend on our knowledge of Him. He reveals Himself as the Almighty Creator; and just as his omnipotence created the world, and is a guarantee for its maintenance, so his omnipotence is a guarantee for the strength of our Christian life. We need to take time to learn that God will work in us all that He wants us to be; and all that He expects of us. He has kept the world going all these ages; will He not uphold me during my short life of sixty or seventy or eighty years? Let us link this thought of his omnipotence with the thought of the hymn,

> Moment by moment I'm kept in his love;
> Moment by moment I've life from above;
> Looking to Jesus till glory doth shine;
> Moment by moment, O Lord, I am thine.

We must only study to know God, but we must know ourselves. We must willingly and heartily accept what God reveals about ourselves—our utter impotence, in contrast with his great omnipotence. It is "to those that have no might" that God "increaseth strength." The mischief is that we have too much strength, and think we do not need to wait upon God. You have heard of ships going out to sea, and the officers are told to be ready to start at any moment. If the question were asked, "What are they waiting for?" the answer would be one of two things. They are either waiting for supplies, or waiting for orders. That is to be our position. We are to wait for the power of the Holy Spirit every day; for the strength of God every hour. Let us cultivate the habit of thus waiting on the Lord, and the supplies will come. Let us also cultivate the habit of waiting for orders, for instructions. God is willing to teach and guide his people beyond their conception. Study and love your Bible, but remember that it is from God that you must get your orders.

Then think what it is that the word "waiting" implies; it implies patience and quietness. Let us cultivate this habit of waiting patiently for the Lord. Before you leave your chamber in the morning, not only have your Bible study and prayer, but let there be definite waiting on God, that He may come in, and take possession of you for the day. Then we must wait not only patiently but continually. Some wait for God in the morning or in the evening, but we need to pray that the Holy Spirit may bring us into the blessed attitude of waiting all the day upon God, waiting continually for instruction, and for supplies of grace and strength. Blessed are all they that thus wait for Him.

Let us also learn to look to God to do for us unexpected things. We need to give up our thoughts about what God can do. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath the heart of man conceived what God hath prepared" for those that wait for Him. Let us remember that our thoughts are terribly defective; let us pray that God would do for us what no human heart can conceive. Expect that God by his Spirit will work in you something utterly beyond your comprehension. It may be without your feeling it, but trust Him for it and He will do it.

Having closed his address, Mr. Murray invited all who could remain for half an hour, definitely to wait on God, to do so. The great bulk of the company remained. In answer to an invitation, a number stood up to indicate the purpose and desire wholly to yield themselves to God, and to wait continually upon Him for the needed strength. Prayer was offered by Mr. Murray, and afterwards by other friends on the platform and in the hall. Last of all, Rev. C. A. Fox led in prayer, making special petition for a safe voyage home for Mr. and Mrs. Murray, and for a rich blessing on their future work among their own people. Thereafter was sung two verses of "God be with you till we meet again," and the Doxology. It was with evident reluctance that the company broke up, after hearing the esteemed visitor's closing words of counsel and exhortation.

C.M.S. MISSIONARY MISSION.

The simultaneous missionary mission to men, which has been going on in quite a number of churches in and around London, found a fitting conclusion in the mass meeting, held on Tuesday week, when Exeter Hall was densely crowded by an enthusiastic audience.

The Bishop of London, who presided, opened with a vigorous address, maintaining that the desire to spread the Gospel is an essential part of the ordinary Christian life; that every Christian ought to be vitally interested in the cause of missions. All may not be called to go forth, but all must give sympathy, support, and prayer.

The Dean of Norwich came next, with an eloquent speech, in the course of which he glanced at the condition of things in many lands, steeped in darkness and cruelty, without God and without hope. He urged a threefold claim for missions. First, on fraternal grounds, for they as Christians knew that God had made his people of one blood; then they had the words and the works of the Lord Jesus Christ; and in the third place it was a fact that three-fourths of these people were in English colonies. They were, indeed, thankful for the progress made in this work, but something more was wanted, and he prayed God that many men from that hall and platform would be raised up to go forth themselves to the foreign field.

Addresses followed by Colonel R. Williams, M.P., Mr. G. L. Pilkington, of Uganda, Mr. C. T. Studd, who spoke for China, and Rev. H. E. Fox.

PENTECOST.

Pricked to the heart; three thousand cried,
"What must we—can we—do?
We nailed the Just One to the tree,
The Prince of Life we slew."
The answer came, but not in words
By human wit devised,
And o'er that mighty host was heard,
"Repent, and be baptized."

The Spirit—quickening Spirit—laid
The words upon the soul,
Three thousand passed from death to life,
Were wounded, and made whole;
There, on the spot, took sides with Christ,
The Saviour, once despised,
And there a bold confession made—
Repenting, were baptized.

How rich the precious harvest reaped
That pentecostal day!
When God the Holy Ghost came down
With mighty sovereign sway;
Still, still He works, and through the Word
By all believers prized,
Souls are still won for Christ, and they Repent, and are baptized.

COLLEGE LIFE.—IV.

By CUTHBERT McEVOY, B.A.

PUNCTUALITY.

Punctuality comes from the Latin punctum, a point; a point of time; instant. To rise at a certain fixed time: neither before nor after: to come into class on the stroke of the hour. This is punctuality. Rather mechanical, a little wooden, a trifle pharisaical. These are plausible objections which if not actually uttered are surely often felt. After what has been said on Method it is perhaps unnecessary to show that the mechanical and the wooden is only apparent. But the predilection for the one particular point on the clock's face which marks the hour, the nicely-calculated regularity, reminds one of straining at the gnat.

"The best men of business certainly observe a strict punctuality. But that is to their own interest. When I was in business I was punctual: when I was at school I was punctual: but now I am a student, and am preparing to be the public minister of Christ in the world, it is not in keeping with my character as a student to be bound by these laws of times and seasons. I start for my duties when I list: I work when the fancy takes me. Who shall imprison aerial thought in manacles of law? The notion is preposterous. The thoughts with which I hold commerce are not of the earth: I am elected to be a minister: exempt from the laws that bind ordinary men. What in others would be inexcusable in me is venial. I am not as other men are."

Somehow the end of this reasoning savours more of pharisaism than the humble observance of a simple and necessary rule. Let us honestly examine ourselves, and see if our shortcomings in this respect do not proceed from a distorted view of our abilities, of our position, and of our aim in life.

With many unpunctuality is due to forgetfulness, want of concentration, or absence of mind. "I did not start in time" is the answer frequently given to the question, "Why were you late?" It amounts to much the same as saying "Because I was." "But why did you not start in time?" "Because I did not know how late it was." That is, you forgot.

It may be said very justly that it is difficult to do good work with one's eye upon the clock. It is. But regular habits are their own timepiece. After a time it is as natural to know when to begin one's duties as it is to know when to sleep and when to eat. And by practice it becomes as natural to work up to the minute of starting as it is to sleep till the minute of waking. It should be as easy to be habitually early as it is to be habitually late.

You are sometimes tempted to be late by the claims of other interests. In another five minutes you would obtain a solution to the problem; but if you do not leave it at once you will be late for your engagement. Is it worth while to postpone the solution that you may not be late just once in a whole session? Yes, a thousand times it is worth while, if ever it is WORTH WHILE TO DO YOUR DUTY.

But a duty so insignificant? Can we call any duty insignificant? Did you engage to finish the problem or to be in time? How many will you interrupt and disturb by laying the problem aside? How many by being late? These are the obvious questions which suggest themselves. But there are other considerations more important than these. We live in a world of mysteries. And the far-off results of one little act of negligence to ourselves and to others can never be foretold.

Whatever be the tree which has unpunctuality as its fruit, be that tree pharisaism or forgetfulness or whatever else, the tree is corrupt and must be hewn down and cast into the fire.

A few considerations of the results of unpunctuality must convince any man how necessary it is to avoid it.

A man who is a minute and a-half late at one class every day of a session of thirty-four weeks, loses in the course of the session the time occupied by no less than five whole lectures. Such a man will probably be late at each class, and will therefore lose a whole week of instruction each session.

A man who in his student days gets inured to the idea that the first two minutes are of no consequence, will, as work becomes more pressing, entertain the same disregard for the next two minutes. And when he goes out into the ministry by being late for most of his engagements he will be an example to the world of a slackness such as all should blush to own. With what feelings do you suppose an unbeliever regards your late entrance into the pulpit? What inferences does he draw? Men like ministers, who have to set an example, must not wait to see what others do before they act; they themselves must be in time, though all the world should be late. "Be ye therefore ready."

Allied to punctuality is neatness. The former gives a time, the latter a place, to everything. Let a habit of neatness pervade your life, and it will be an added power to you. Keep your study neat. Let each book and paper and implement have its own allotted place. The untidy man keeps his books anywhere. A reference has to be made to one of them, and after a long search the missing volume is found under the paper on which he is writing. Thus time, always precious, is lost. But it is the habit of untidiness which is bad. It is worse than all its results. Be therefore also neat.

THE WALDENSIAN CHURCH.

By Rev. O. GOLIA-MAURO, Waldensian Deputation in England.

Our Mission extends everywhere in Italy, in Sicily, in Sardinia, and in the Isle of Elba. In all the principal and secondary towns we have churches and mission-halls, and hundreds of villages are visited every week or fortnight, where we hold family services in dining-rooms and kitchens lent us by adherents. I will now confine myself to a part of one of the five districts into which the field is divided—namely, the district of Piedmont, Liguria.

In the north, at the foot of the Alps, we find the little church of Coazze, with more than forty communicants, a day-school, and a Sunday-school. The services there are well attended. A young married couple, lately admitted into the church, have known what resistance means, and have been enabled to come victoriously out of strong temptation. On account of their conversion they were deprived of their work; at the same time a count offered to become godfather to their child, and the wife of a knight to become its godmother, as well as to present it with a beautiful outfit, on condition that they should have it baptized by the priest. But these were the words with which they refused:—"Tell this gentleman and lady that the Lord has helped us until now, and faith assures us that He will help us to the end. You see that we suffer, then leave us in peace."

At Aosta, the town where our Queen Margherita often passes the summer, our church has nearly fifty members. Often four men are to be seen coming to our service, each bringing his New Testament; they are not yet members of the church, but they have to walk three and a-half hours in order to listen to an explanation of the Gospel. Another, a shoemaker of sixty years of age, travels twenty-five kilomètres (about sixteen English miles) on foot each Sunday for the same purpose.

Our church at Ivrea numbers more than 150 communicants. It has lately suffered several losses by death, but the pastors have made the funerals occasions for preaching to who were present at the cemetery. At Ivrea tolerance and civilisation are in progress. All the municipality decided to take part in the funeral of one of our members who had belonged to the Municipal Council, and was a Justice of the Peace, and requested as a favour that the coffin might be carried by four councillors. The members of this church are mostly poor, but generous. One workman contributed last year 16 francs; this year through illness, he can only give twelve, which he greatly laments.

At Piedicavallo, the work is very flourishing, since we have been enabled to build a nice church. One of the members not being able to contribute money, promised wood and labour worth 500 francs. We have here a Sunday-school as well as day and night schools, which are visited and praised by the educational authorities.

At Pietramarazzi we have day and Sunday-schools, and a congregation of nearly fifty converts, of which the life is very spiritual and the witness for the truth most courageous. One young student here has shown a steadfastness seldom known at his age. The director of the college and his family, wishing to force him to go to mass with his fellow students, said to his parents: "You will never succeed in making me do things in opposition to God's will. You can cast me off, but you will not succeed in making me a hypocrite. At all events, I am sure that even though my professors hate me, God loves me, and if I am faithful to Him, He will recompense me, not through merit, but through grace"—adding, "You would find it better to which leads to heaven." This young man has attracted the esteem of all, even of his superiors, and at the end of the scholastic year he obtained the highest certificates for work and good conduct. Amongst those whom death has lately taken from this church was a young man, full of intelligence and faith—through apoplectic seizure. Just before his death, when full of health and vigour, after having read the 90th Psalm to his aged mother, he said, "You see, dear mother, we must learn to count our days—to be always ready, young and old, to answer to the call of our heavenly Father." Two days after he received his call.

Turin was the town in which the Waldensian Missions were first started, in 1848, as soon as the Vaudois received religious liberty through Charles Albert. It was through General Beckwith's help that we were enabled to build this beautiful church here. Every Sunday morning from 400 to 600 assemble to listen to the Gospel. In addition to these regular attendants, the Gospel has been preached by our two pastors there to more than 5000 Roman Catholics in one year. We have in Turin nearly 400 communicants, ninety-five scholars in the day-school, and 112 in the Sunday-school; and the contributions of the church have amounted to 3500 francs in a year.

One of the Waldensian pastors who works in Turin is Signor Ribetti. He was one of the three Protestant pastors who, at the time of Pius IX., were chosen to sustain—against a commission of cardinals in the Vatican—the discussion as to whether St. Peter ever went to Rome as first Pope, as the Romish Church teaches. Pastor Ribetti is our most able lecturer against the errors of Romanism. Some little time ago Trione, one of the most eloquent priests of Turin, challenged a public discussion with whatsoever pastor would accept it. Immediately Pastor Ribetti wrote saying he would do so. Seeing that things were thus becoming serious, the priest, Trione, drew back and refused; but Pastor Ribetti gave his lectures all the same, and for several evenings our church contained more than 800 Roman Catholic listeners. In connection with the church in Turin we have a Y.W.C.A., which is called the "Society of Sisters," who have done work for the poor to the amount of 1130 francs. Another society, called the "Banner of the Gospel," is a very flourishing Y.M.C.A.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 15.

"Ye shall do no servile work."—Num. xxix. 1, 7, 12, 35.

There was a good deal of work to be done, but it was not servile work. Throughout the seventh month, the work centred around the tabernacle, and the service of God, rather than around the tents and occupations of Israel as at other times. The same distinction is clearly made by the Apostle. We are created in Christ Jesus unto good works; but our faith and salvation are not of works, lest any man should boast (Eph. ii. 9, 10).

Do not work up to the Cross, but down from it.—We must come empty-handed to the Cross, and receive forgiveness and eternal life, which will immediately begin to approve themselves in the fruits of righteousness. None work like those who have been saved by the grace of God, but their work is not servile work; not that of slaves, but of sons. How many there are who confuse these, trying to work for salvation, instead of receiving it first and then working.

Do not work up to union with Christ but from it.—We cannot unite ourselves to the true Vine by any activity of ours; our resort is to lay ourselves at the feet of the great Husbandman, that He may graft us into living union with Jesus. When once that union is consummated, through our yielded nature, the Root begins to pour his mighty energy. Fruit-bearing is not servile work, but easy, natural, blessed.

Do not work up to Pentecost but out from it.—We cannot win the gift of the blessed Paraclete. No tears, prayers, agonies of soul can purchase it. It must be received by a single act of faith. But when once He is in us in his fulness, then tears, and prayers, and strivings for the salvation of men flow out without effort. We strive according to his working. But there is no servility, no strain, no restraint, save that of love.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 16.

"The Lord shall forgive her."—Num. xxx. 5, 8, 12.

If the father or husband disallowed the vow a woman made, it would not stand, nor would she be held responsible for its fulfilment. God would not keep her to a promise which was hindered in execution by causes over which she had no control. This is a profound principle.

You may feel that a certain step is required of you by Christ, that indeed you are bound by your allegiance to Him to take it, nay, you have already promised Him that you will take it; but, suddenly and most unexpectedly, you are prevented from taking it. The express prohibition of those who have a right to determine your action, or the verdict of the physician, or the evident call of duty in another direction, makes it needful for you to relinquish your project. What then, is God grieved and angry? Not so, He understands the whole of the case perfectly, and accepts your will for the deed, and bids you go in peace. This, however, does not affect matters in which conscience is clear in demanding or prohibiting a certain line of conduct.

Sometimes God's silence is consent. You made your solemn dedication in his Holy presence, there was no answering voice, or rush of emotion, or witnessing seal, He held his peace from day to day. But in that silence He established all your vows, all your bonds. "If it were not so, I would have told you."

If parents capriciously forbid their children carrying out solemn resolutions and vows, the burden of blame must rest on their shoulders. They must render their account to God, and give answer for their action. It will go hard with those who put needless hindrances and obstacles in their brothers' pathway.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 17.

"Everything that may abide the fire, ye shall make to go through the fire; and all that abideth not the fire, ye shall make to go through the water."—Num. xxxi. 23.

The great aim of this enactment was to render these articles ceremonially clean. They had been in the use of the Midianites, and required cleansing, before they could be appropriated by Israel. But the cleansing processes were to be determined by their texture. Fire for what would stand fire; water for what could not stand fire.

We must be thoroughly cleansed.—If a man will purge himself, he shall be a vessel unto honour, meet for the Master's use. Not cleverness but cleanliness is the prime condition of service. Jesus will not put throne-water into impure and polluted receptacles. What fellowship hath Christ with Belial?

We shall not be passed through fire, unless we can stand it.—Our faith is too precious to God to be exposed to risk. He will not let us be tempted beyond what we are able, less we be discouraged, and make shipwreck. If, then, you are called at this time to pass through an unusually searching ordeal, be sure that your Heavenly Father knows that you can endure it.

We must go through water, if not through fire.—The one is negative, the other positive; the first appertains to John the Baptist, the second to the Holy Spirit. The latter is the best; but be thankful, if you cannot endure it, that there is a discipline more tempered and gentle, which will yet render you meet for the handling of the Holy Saviour.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 18.

"Be sure your sin will find you out."—Num. xxxii. 23.

Sin is like the boomerang of the savage, it comes back on the hand that has launched it forth. The brethren accused Joseph of being a spy, and cast him into the pit; and on the same charge they were cast into prison. David committed adultery and murder, so Absalom requited him. The Jews crucified the Lord, and they were impaled around Jerusalem till room and wood for their crosses failed.

There is a Divine order in society. God has so constituted the world, that as man deals with his neighbour, so he is dealt with. The consequence does not always follow immediately. There is often a long interval between the lightning flash and the thunder-peal. The sentence against an evil work is not executed suddenly. But though God's mills grind slowly, they do grind, and to powder. Whatsoever a man sows he reaps, whether of corruption from the flesh or of eternal life from the Spirit.

When sin comes to find you out, like a sleuth-hound on the track of the criminal, be sure that it finds you in Jesus. "That I may be found in Him." Nothing will avail to intercept the awful execution of sin's vengeance, except the blood and righteousness of Jesus. Put Him between you and your sins, between you and your past, between you and the penalty of a broken law. Be sure that only when the blood of Jesus speaks for you through earth and heaven, there can be a cutting off of sin's terrible entail.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19.

They journeyed from Marah, and came to Elim: and in Elim...—Num. xxxiii. 9.

In his enumeration of the halting places of Israel, Moses mentions Marah and Elim; in the case of former, he does not dwell on the murmuring of the people over the bitter stream, but in the case of Elim, he loves to dilate on the twelve springs of water, and ten palm trees, under which they pitched. Years of weary travel had not obliterated the memory of those ten palms.

We should remember the blessings of the past,—God has so made us that we soon forget pain; but memory is willing to keep the pictures of sunny scenes unobliterated upon the walls of her galleries. Thus we may encourage our faith, and comfort our hearts, by musing on the hand of the Lord which has been upon us for good. You have had many hard tracks of desert sand to traverse, but never forget those ten palm trees. Let their gracious shade and fruit still refresh you. And remember that God will restore them, whenever needed. If not, find your palm trees and wells in Himself.

God does not remember the sins of the past.—There is no word of their murmurings, either at Marah or Rephidim. It is thus that God deals with us. "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." When God forgives, He forgets. He erases the record from his book, and deals with us as though no sin had been committed. When we get to heaven and study the way-book, we shall find all the deeds of love and self-denial carefully recorded, though we have forgotten them, and all the sins blotted out, though we remember them.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 20.

"This is the land which ye shall inherit of God."—Num. xxxiv. 13.

It is important that we should know the limits and possibilities of our lives. We must beat the bounds, first to know how far we may go, and secondly where we must stop, in our inheritance.

How far may we go.—It is our privilege to know God and the hope of his calling, and the riches of the glory of his indwelling in our hearts, and the power of the Resurrection throbbing within us, lifting us to share the risen Life of Jesus. Day by day we may be kept from yielding to known sin; day by day, though keenly conscious of temptation, we may be more than conquerors; day by day, the Holy Spirit may work in us perfect love towards God and man, to the limit of our light; day by day the Lord Jesus may be more perfectly formed within us.

Where we must stop.—We may expect to be blameless, but not faultless, till He present us to Himself: to be delivered from temptation, but not freed from its assaults: to be kept in perfect peace, but not secured from the pressure of adversity: to be dead to sin and self, but not daring to say that either is dead within us: to be delivered from this present evil world, as to spirit and temper, though still called to inhabit it as its salt and light. Take possession of every inch of God-given territory in Jesus, but beware of going beyond it.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21.

The death of the high priest.—Num. xxxv.

One after another they passed away. They were not able to continue by reason of death. Their offices and garments, and ministry passed from each in turn, as from Aaron, whom Moses stripped with his own hands on Nebo. But their death only brings into greater prominence the encouraging contrast in the case of our blessed Lord, who ever liveth, and hath, therefore, an unchangeable priesthood.

Christ ever lives: what an encouragement to the penitent! All that He ever was, He is; all that He ever did for others He is willing to do for thee. The records of his earthly life, with his tenderness for those who were out of the way, are leaves and specimen pages of the diary of his life. Therefore, there need be no hesitation in applying to Him. He is no unexplored continent, no treacherous ocean, no new hand at the work of helping men.

Christ ever lives: what a blessing to the saint!—"I am He that liveth." He bent over his fainting apostle, and said in effect, You remember what I was when you leant on my bosom, followed me to the shore on which I had prepared your repast, and assured you of my never-altering affection. I am all that still; through death I have come to a life which can never decay; because I live ye shall live also. Let us rest our souls on this sweet word, from his heart there will ever stream to us rivers of incorruptible life. Not our life, but his in us. Let us keep all the channels and apertures of our being open towards the fountain of eternal life, that there may be no stint or restraint to our reception.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

DECEMBER 22.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.—Luke ii. 8-20.

GOLDEN TEXT, v. 10.

IT is not possible to fix with any certainty the day of our Lord's birth. The most that can be said for the day now observed is that it may be correct. The event it celebrates is important at any season of the year.

Our lesson finds Joseph and Mary, his espoused wife, in Bethlehem. The circumstances leading to their being there when Jesus was born are a remarkable illustration of the over-ruling providence of God. Who would have thought that the Roman Emperor would have been the means of securing that Mary's Son should be born in the city which prophecy had foretold?

The birth has already taken place amid surroundings that were remarkably significant. That "there was no room for Him in the inn," was prophetic of the treatment He would afterwards receive. The lowly surroundings of his birth evidenced his great condescension, and his readiness to stoop to the very lowest. It is not strange that He afterwards found his most numerous hearers among the poor.

But this lesson reminds us that mingled with these circumstances of extreme lowliness were some indications of his majesty. He is no ordinary person whose coming is foretold for centuries, and whose arrival is announced by angels. This is "God manifest in the flesh"; "the woman's seed" who should bruise the serpent's head; the Lamb of God who should bear away the sin of the world. It was fitting that the coming of such a Saviour should be announced by unusual signs.

I. THE FIRST CHRISTMAS CAROL was sung in the fields of Bethlehem, made familiar to us by our recent lessons upon Ruth and David. Perhaps the very fields in which Ruth gleaned, and David afterwards kept his sheep, were privileged to hear this angelic song.

The singers were "a multitude of the heavenly host" (12). The remarkable fact was, not that they should be there, nor that they should rejoice with singing over such an event; but that they should be visible to human eyes, and that the strains of their music should be heard by human ears. Such music has never been heard either before or since.

Their theme was introduced by one angel in a kind of recitative (9-12). Three things are remarkable in connection with it: first, the glorious appearance of the angel, which filled the shepherds with fear; next the remarkable announcement he made (10, 11), which told that the hope of all previous ages was now fulfilled; and lastly, the very extraordinary sign by which the new-born Saviour should be discovered (12). It was a sign suited to the persons to whom the announcement was made.

To this the multitude of angels sang a chorus, which in our Authorised Version (which is probably correct) contains three parts (14). The advent of the Saviour (1) means "glory to God." The very highest heavens will yet resound with praise as the result of this lowly birth, and the glory of God in the work of redemption shall exceed that which He receives from all other works of his hand. (2) "Peace on earth"—between man and God, through the putting away of sin, and therefore in man's own conscience and heart, and between man and his fellows. The incarnation contains the promise of universal peace. However long delayed, it must come, and the angels' song must be fulfilled. (3) "Good will to men," not of one nation only, but of all nations; not to "men of good will" only, as the R.V. reads, but even to the wayward and wandering. God's will towards all men is a good will (see 1 Tim. ii. 4).

The audience were shepherds (8), men engaged in a lowly and despised occupation. Evidently devout men, among the number who were looking for the coming of the Saviour. God's favours are not given to those who can pay for them, but rather to those who need them, and can appreciate them.

II. THE CONDUCT OF THE SHEPHERDS (15-20) suggests much instruction. (1) They believed (15). They proposed to go, not to see whether this thing had come to pass, but to see it. The very remarkable testimony given to them was accepted without question. (2) They put their faith into practice by going to the Saviour. Of what use is it to believe about Jesus if we do not actually come to Him? (3) They acted promptly—"with haste"—(16). Delay is the handmaid of doubt; faith grows by prompt action. (4) They began immediately to witness to others (17-18). The good tidings was not for them alone, but for "all people" (10). They may be accounted the first preachers of the incarnation.

Note the contrast. The shepherds published these things, Mary pondered them. "Both are right; they illustrate different, but not inconsistent phases of experience. Pondering and publishing are both Christian duties."

For the Young.

A BRAVE SPANISH BOY.

I SEND you a little account of a discussion one of our pupils, a boy of thirteen, had yesterday with two Sisters of Mercy. I think I mentioned him in a recent letter as having replied to a priest who told him the Gospels contained evil doctrines. He has been in the school about two years and a half, and when first admitted was a regular little scapegrace, unable to read or write, and ignorant of everything but evil. He is now our most advanced pupil, and is by his own confession, his changed conduct, and the testimony of all who know him, a child of God and a witness for the Truth at home and amongst his companions. His name is Henry, or "Enric" in Catalan.

Yesterday afternoon he was in a field near the town with some other lads, when two "sisters," passing by, accosted them, and asked if they were in the habit of attending mass. "Never," replied Enric. The "sisters": "What school do you attend?" "The Evangelical school." "Yes, so we thought from your cheeky manner! Have you ever been to communion?" "No." "How old are you?" "Thirteen years." "And why do you not attend communion?" "I have no wish to do so." "Well, well, not so fast! How often have you been to confession?" "Once." "To whom?" "To Jesus Christ." "Well, but my boy, you should go first to the priests." "No, the priests are sinners like everyone else. They have not the power to forgive sins. It is Jesus Christ who forgives, and not they." "Why so?" "Why did Jesus Christ die on the cross?" inquired Enric. "To save those who attend mass and confession, and also those who are rich," replied the "sisters." "How many disciples had Jesus?" continued the boy. "Twelve." "Were they rich or poor?" "Poor." "Good! And which of the disciples confessed to the priests?" "Judas." "Did either of the others do so?" "No."

Pointing to the crucifixes hanging on the rosary by the sisters' side, Enric asked, "What is the meaning of these crucifixes?" "These?" exclaimed the sisters. "These we esteem so highly that we kiss them," suiting the action to the word. "They cannot save us," said Enric. "We do not believe in dead gods. We will have Jesus Christ, who died, but rose again." "Ah," replied the sisters, "these doctrines have been so impressed upon you that you will never forget them. But, my child, we do not blame you; the fault is your parents' and teacher's." "Thanks be to God," said Enric, "that He has opened my eyes to understand his Word. Whereas before I was always in the habit of blaspheming and frequenting the cafés, now I do not do so." "Well," said the sisters, "you confess to Christ, and we pray to Mary, who asks Christ to forgive us." "Who died for us, Mary or Jesus? Then to Jesus we should confess, not to Mary."

The sisters turned to the other lads, and told them to pay no heed to Enric's words, and sneeringly remarked to him, "You are very wise. You will soon have to take a degree for your wisdom." They were then about to continue their walk, when Enric called to them, "Listen, listen awhile." "Speak," said they. "Can you tell whether, when you died, you will go to heaven?" "No, we cannot tell; only God knows." "Ah, indeed! Then how can you be right if you do not know whither you are going?" "Do you know if you will go to heaven when you die?" they asked. "Yes, I do know," replied Enric. "How do you know?" "Because Jesus Christ said that whosoever believeth in Him hath everlasting life." "Ah, we guess that the Protestant teacher has taught you all this." "It is you who protest against religion," exclaimed Enric. "So you imagine," said the "sisters." "No, I do not imagine it; in truth it is so. I know you have altered the Book and all its teachings," concluded Enric. The "sisters" again warned the others to pay no heed to his words, and ended by inviting all the boys to their residence to speak with a learned "father." Enric says he would gladly have gone with them, but he had to return home.

George paid another visit the day before yesterday to the neighbouring village of "Sentmenat," where he distributed a number of Gospels and tracts. We hope to hold a lantern service there shortly. We need some Bibles and tracts very badly. I have constantly to refuse applications from persons who are most anxious to possess copies.

FROM LITTLE THINGS TO GREAT.

(Scripture Union portion for Dec. 16, Isaiah xxviii. 9—20)

OLD or young alike have lessons to learn, and sometimes grown-up people have very difficult tasks set them, though children do not think so. Have you ever heard the little story which Miss Havergal told so sweetly about the child-niece who asked whether "auntie said her lessons all to God?" One of the happiest studies of the King's family is trust in his hearing and answering prayer. I will tell you how a little girl first found that out.

Fanny had a strict governess and a kind father and mother, so that it was a great delight to go for a drive with her parents when school was over. But Miss L—— insisted on her being ready in good time.

One afternoon the carriage came round as usual, but Fanny could not find her gloves. She was sure that she had put them away carefully, but there was no trace of them in the proper drawer. Miss L—— was angry, and refused—very naturally—to believe that Fanny had not been careless.

"You must not go unless they are found in five minutes," she said; "this will be a reminder to you in future to be more tidy."

Poor Fanny was in great distress, and knew not what to do, until suddenly a voice seemed to say in her heart, "Why don't you ask God?" She ran upstairs, and knelt down quickly beside her bed, begging our Father in heaven to guide her in the search, and spare her the disappointment she feared. Fanny had always said her prayers, but she had never really prayed before; and God heard her. She rose from her knees full of trust, and went once more to the wardrobe. Lo! there were her gloves, which had slipped between the drawer and the back of the wardrobe. She put down her hand without a moment's hesitation, and drew them out in triumph and thankfulness. Fanny is nearly forty years old now, but she has drawn closer to God every day since that first step towards faith in Him.

Last autumn I was staying at a lodging-house by the seaside, and on the morning for departure I missed a pretty gold pin, which I valued very much. I searched everywhere, but it was nowhere to be found, and would certainly never appear again if left behind in a place where so many people were coming and going.

I am ashamed to say that I thought of nothing but my pin all morning, and did not even attend when prayers were read. At last I just put the matter into God's hands, and did my very best not to fret about it. Then, and not until then, He helped me.

I went to my room, and prepared to go away; there was not one corner left in which I could search, so I could only close my trunk and boxes. All was finished, when I turned back and lifted a faded bouquet of flowers which I had worn the day before, now to be thrown away; what should I see there but my treasure! How glad I was!

We are such stupid scholars that our Master has to teach us "line upon line, precept upon precept," but some who learn willingly and quickly find even hard lessons easy. It is our part to be very faithful in the small things, and trust Him to give us the great things if it be his will. The best way to secure a high place, and a glorious prize at the end of school-time, is to learn each day's lesson thoroughly, when and where it is set us—"here a little and there a little." C. MAUD BATTERSBY.

A THANKSGIVING IN ST. GILES.'

Having attended the annual gathering, organised by the St. Giles' Christian Mission, in Little Wild-street, long known as the "Thieves' Supper," right from the commencement, we cannot but mark the pleasing change; noting how the reformed men and saved lads have become so numerous as to monopolise the seats—until at length it has become "A Thanksgiving Meeting" instead of a "Thieves' Supper." Entering, on Tuesday week, the well-known chapel in the narrow back street behind Lincoln's Inn Fields, we found it crowded in every part, while rows of bright, respectable-looking lads filled up the central area, representing a small proportion of the good work done. Hundreds such have been saved from a life of misery and crime which seemed inevitable, had not such a Mission as this found a way to save them in time.

Dr. R. Anderson, Director of the Criminal Investigation Department, presided, and in opening, expressed his high sense of the value of the work. Confining himself to that branch of it with which he was more familiar, namely, the reclamation of discharged prisoners, he commended it to the public as essentially a Christian mission of great importance to the nation, especially as it espoused the cause of the community in the case of criminals who were irreclaimable, and who sought to shelter themselves under the wing of the Mission. For that very reason he commended the work to the sympathy and support of the Christian public.

Mr. F. A. Bevan followed with a statement of the Mission operations, reviewing the general work in St. Giles', the relief measures, and the pressure of poverty. Referring specially to the Women's Refuge, he said its doors are ever open, and no homeless woman or girl found wandering by the police at night is denied admission if she is brought there. Food, rest, and warmth are ready for all, and further assistance afterwards if there is any chance of such assistance being beneficial; 580 women and girls received the benefits of this Home last year, and for a large number of these situations were found.

Then there is a large work among the poor children. In our Sunday-schools and Band of Hope we have 1,400 young people. For those in weak health there is a Holiday Home. Moreover a Seaside Convalescent Home has lately been added to the Mission.

Turning to the work among discharged prisoners, first offenders, and tempted boys, the speaker referred to the efforts being made for the destitute children and prisoners. The regular work of the prisoners' branch is in full activity. During the year nearly 21,000 breakfasts had been given at the prison gates, and the Mission had in other ways assisted 5705 discharged prisoners, and 328 convicts on their release from terms of penal servitude. In the five Boys' Homes connected with the Mission, 500 juvenile offenders were received annually and cared for. As such an extensive work requires generous support from the public, an effort is being made to raise £3000 to meet the expenses of the current year.

A brief statement followed by the devoted director, Mr. William Wheatley, whose peculiar aptitude in dealing with this difficult class has won special recognition. Other friends followed, warmly supporting the claims of the St. Giles's Christian Mission in view of the actual results which they knew to spring from its efforts. Amongst these speakers were Messrs. H. Curtis Bennett (Police magistrate), T. H. Baylis, Q.C., and James Judd, J.P., Major Griffiths, Rev. Knight Newton, chaplain of Oxford prison, and Mr. Manning, Governor of Pentonville prison. During the evening Lady Agnes Anderson distributed prizes to a number of lads who had conducted themselves in a satisfactory manner during the year.

Pearl Fisher.

ENTERPRISES BY MR. MOODY.

One of Mr. Moody's latest enterprises, and one which will doubtless in time be a great power in the United States, is the Bible Institute Colportage Association.

In England, where we can so easily purchase good religious literature at low prices, it is almost impossible to realise the great difficulty of obtaining such books in America. In many cities it is practicably impossible to find them at any bookseller's, and in one case an elder of a church gave as his excuse for not keeping any religious books, although his shop was filled with novels of all sorts, that he would not have it said that he made money out of his religion.

Early this year Mr. Moody began to publish a series of books by well-known Christian authors. Some contain sermons by himself, C. H. Spurgeon, John McNeill, Major Whittle, and others, while one is a selection of sacred poems. The volumes are issued semi-monthly, can be subscribed for by the year, and being registered as periodicals may be sent all over the country at very low rates of postage. A book of similar size would cost about 30 cents (1s. 3d.), at a bookseller's, but very large editions having been brought out they are sold to the colporteurs very cheaply, and they retail them at about 15 cents per copy. Every encouragement is given to colporteurs, and Mr. Moody during the summer offered prizes to the students at Northfield who, during the vacation, sold the largest number. No salaries are paid, the books being given at such a low rate to any who will sell them, that they can make considerable profit, while they offer them at half the price that would have to be paid at a bookseller's. Many students in this way earned money to pay their expenses during the coming session.

By this means Mr. Moody is endeavouring to flood the States with Gospel literature, and thus to counteract the influence of the vicious reading now being so widely circulated.

Another branch of the work is that of placing these volumes in the hands of prisoners. Having heard of the appalling number awaiting their trial in the county gaols throughout the United States, he devised this means of putting the way of life before them; and, having raised a fund for the purpose, is trying to place a supply of these volumes in every prison. Any Christian worker in the States, writing to him, and undertaking to distribute the books in their county prisons, receives a free grant for the purpose, and many copies have already been blessed. Separated from their evil companions, kept from drink, etc., and with nothing to do, the prisoners gladly read the books that are given to them.

A gentleman in Texas purchased a large number and circulated them among the cowboys, and it was not long before he heard of four conversions through their instrumentality. Mr. Moody would like his English friends to know of this work, that they may join in prayer for the seed that is thus being sown broadcast through the country. His son-in-law, Mr. A. P. Fitt, superintends one depot at Northfield, and there is another at the Bible Institute at Chicago.

Many accounts of Northfield have appeared in The Christian at various times, but they have generally spoken of work during the summer months. It is a very different place when the glorious autumn tints make the country all ablaze with colour. The maples are one mass of scarlet and gold, the oaks crimson, and the birches pale delicate yellows, and I shall never forget the lovely Connecticut valley as I saw it in October. Not only is the colouring of the landscape different, but the whole aspect of Northfield itself. The Seminary buildings, which during the conventions were used for visitors, are now thronged with girls, 400 of whom have entered this session. During this period "The Northfield" is no longer an hotel, but is used as a Bible Training School, with a six months' session, and between sixty and seventy young women are residing there, not all belonging to the Training School, for some are Seminary girls, for whom there is no room in the other buildings. At Mount Hermon School, on the other side of the river, there are between three and four hundred young men and boys, so that in the Congregational Church, which in the summer was thronged with visitors from all parts to hear Mr. Webb-Peploe unfold the word, there are on Sundays between seven hundred and eight hundred students.

It is scarcely necessary to state that in Mr. Moody's schools the Bible is well taught. I was present on two occasions when all the Bible teachers from the Seminary, Mount Hermon, and the training school met to talk over their work, and was much interested as one and another gave accounts of the line of study which they took up in the various classes, the aim being to give as far as possible in the four or three years courses a comprehensive view of the contents of the Bible.

It was my privilege to visit from Northfield one or two of the large colleges for women in New England, and found that Mr. Moody's Seminary is looked upon as a good preparatory school, and those who are able to take up the higher education pass on to these colleges after graduating at Northfield. The same is true of Mount Hermon School, for many of the young men who graduate there go to Yale, Harvard, and other colleges.

A CHURCH IN JAMAICA.

On the completion of his college course at Kingston, Jamaica, Rev. W. A. Tucker was unanimously invited in 1875 to become pastor of the Ebenezer Baptist Church in Spanish Town, and there he has laboured for the past twenty years. The church was in a somewhat disorganised condition, and the pastor gave a third of his income for three years to assist in clearing off a mortgage liability. At that time the membership was about 300, but by God's blessing on Mr. Tucker's ministry, a tide of numerical and spiritual prosperity commenced, and the church increased gradually to 600 members. There have been many instances of clear conversion. Sometimes in a year fifty persons were added to the church. Some of the members have been drafted off and formed into a village church some miles away, and the membership of the Spanish Town Church now numbers 470.

A second church, at Hartlands, numbers eighty members, with a Sunday-school of ninety children, and a day-school of about eighty. A third church at Bower Wood has a membership of seventy, with a Sunday-school of sixty children, and a day-school of about seventy. This district was a very benighted one eighteen years ago. But now things are changed; there is a chapel there, built through the efforts of the pastor, a teacher's residence, and a pastor's cottage, and good work is being done. Mr. Tucker has established six Sunday-schools and five day-schools, and trained up a goodly number of young men and women, who are now engaged in Christian work in connection with these three churches.

The chapel building at Spanish Town, which is a substantial brick building, was quite dilapidated when the pastor took charge of the church; it has been repaired and renovated, and a pastor's residence built. The church is now, however, in financial difficulty through the failures of the merchants from whom the materials were supplied to do the work. The church was compelled to mortgage their chapel and pastor's house to a building society, and obtained the money at an interest of 7½ per cent. per annum. The debt stands at about £600 at present, and the mortgage will soon expire. The people have already liberally contributed, and Mr. Tucker now appeals to British Christians for help. He is at present residing at 2, Salisbury-villas, Cleveland-road, Barnes, S.W., where communications may be addressed to him.

"BAPTISMAL REGENERATION."

WHAT IS THE NEW BIRTH?

Mr. Hawes found support for the doctrine of baptismal regeneration in our Lord's words to Nicodemus: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God," emphasising the word water as a reference to the ceremony of baptism, and maintaining that these words prove baptism to be necessary to salvation.

Various interpretations of our Lord's words have reached us. Some correspondents distinguish between entering the Kingdom and being saved, and find in the new birth an advance in grace rather than the awakening to eternal life. Others find in the expression "born of water" an allusion to John's baptism; others again, hold that the context is against such an interpretation.

J. McC. has many seconders in his view as thus stated:—"There is much to show that 'water' is here used to symbolise the Word of God. See, for instance, Ps. cxix. 9; John xv. 3, xvii. 17 Eph. v. 26. The Word is very distinctly represented to be the germ of eternal life when associated with the Holy Spirit (see Matt. xiii. 19, 23). Also, in James i. 18, we are told that 'Of his own will begat He us with the Word of Truth'; and in 1 Pet. i. 23, 'being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God.' Surely these passages indicate that the birth from above is brought about by the Word of God being received as taught by the Holy Spirit."

Another correspondent, "J.E. B. (Clapham)," holds that the clause should be understood "born of water, even the Spirit," looking upon the former as an emblem of the latter. He concludes that there is no allusion to water baptism, and thinks it inconceivable that Christ can have made any part of his spiritual religion to depend, even in part, upon a material ceremony. T. Burnell (Stockton-on-Tees), submits: "Our Lord's words in John iii. 5 are not to be taken as part of his fundamental teaching on the 'new birth,' but rather as meeting the need of a Pharisee, who, in common with his sect, 'rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of Him' (Luke vii. 29-30). To Nicodemus God's plan of salvation was, to go first to John for the baptism of repentance, and his mind being set right, his heart would be prepared to receive the teaching of Jesus concerning the new birth, which is wrought by spiritual, and not by material means."

A different view is put forward by H. C. W., who, quoting Rev. James Neil's little work, "Strange Figures" (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.), maintains that the verse is an instance of the grammatical figure hendiadys, by which two nouns are used instead of a noun and an adjective. Thus the words mean: "Except a man be born of spiritual water," i.e., the influence and washing of the Holy Spirit (see John vii. 37-39). It is held in this explanation that if water baptism and the influence of God's Spirit were referred to as two separate things, we should have read: "Born of water and of the Holy Spirit," but our Saviour only says, "Born of water and of Spirit" (not even "the Spirit"), which is in the exact form of hendiadys for "spiritual water." This birth is conversion, a saving change of heart, "the renewing of the Holy Ghost."

AS TO "HOLY COMMUNION."

With regard to the Lord's Supper, Mr. Hawes said: "If we are made members of the Body of Christ, we need nourishment, and that nourishment or food for our souls is provided in that great sacrament of Christ's love, the Holy Communion."

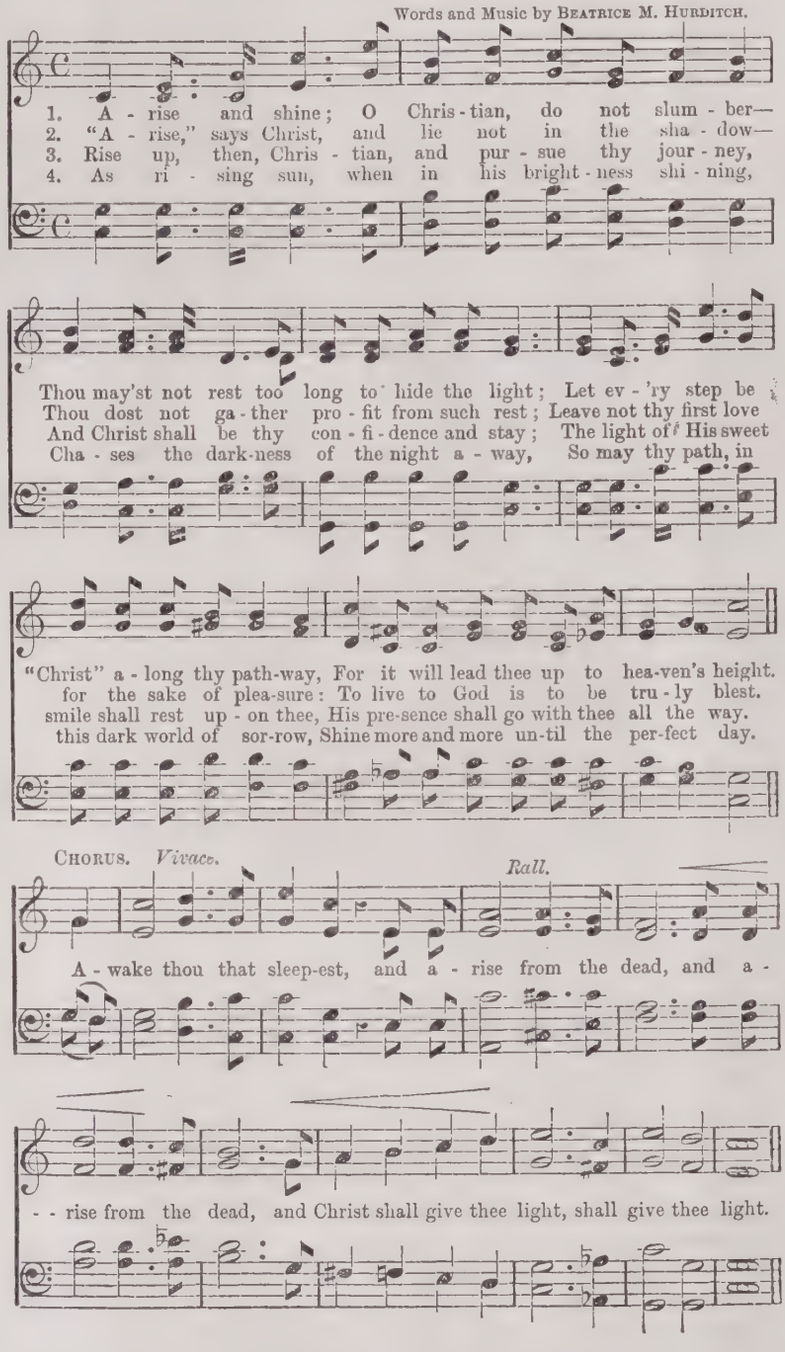
R. G. Nixon (Castle Balfour, Lisnaskea) writes: "This places the creature where the Creator ought to be. As the Israelites, when they crossed over Jordan, raised a memorial to remind generations to come that God had led their fathers through that river on dry ground, so Jesus Christ when He instituted the Last Supper, commanded his disciples to partake of it afterwards in remembrance of Him. Every believer in Christ who partakes of the Lord's Supper is reminded of what Christ suffered for him in the offering of the all-sufficient sacrifice, by virtue of which He entered, as Great High Priest, within the vail, into the real Holy of Holies, even heaven itself. There, as the believer's Advocate before the throne, He procures from the Giver of every good and perfect gift the necessary sustenance for the believer's spiritual life, and bestows it abundantly by his own messenger, even the Holy Ghost."

Several correspondents show that the Lord's Supper is not, in the sense intended, "food for the soul." One says:—"Nothing material, having to be eaten and drunk, can feed the spiritual nature. 'Meat commendeth us not to God; neither if we eat are we the better, neither if we eat not are we the worse' (1 Cor. viii. 8)." J. A. McIntyre (London), reasoning from Mr. Hawes's own point of view, writes: "If the Holy Communion is the only available food for the child of God, how is it that a child born again in baptism is able to maintain its spiritual life for, say fifteen or sixteen years, and oftentimes longer than that, without any nourishment at all? For, as a general rule, young people, when confirmed, are about fifteen years of age."

UNIFORMITY IMPOSSIBLE.

The questions discussed above are side issues from the one originally raised "True Union;" but several correspondents have noted the fact that Romish doctrines, by whomsoever held, are a barrier to anything in the form of religious co-operation. One says: "While deploring 'our unhappy divisions' I think it better that they should exist than that a union which could only be union in name should be patched up between those who are separated by fundamental differences."

Another writes: "Without the least question, the practice of pædobaptism has mixed the Church and the world together; whereas the expressed design of the ordinance of the Lord Jesus was to keep the Church separate from the world, and to be a voluntary confession of the separation." This correspondent hints that the introduction of a human rite instead of that of the primitive Church may have had much to do with the development of many grave forms of error, with their disintegrating results. It is also shown that the true union is spiritual, and enjoyed by all who abide in Christ, and have his Spirit within them.



Mr. J. J. Sims (Lincoln) writes: "The teaching of the Church of Rome is that salvation is, through the sacraments, ~~administered~~ by a priesthood. The teaching of the Reformation is that salvation is through the finished work of Christ, and received by simple faith, the ordinances being regarded only as an acknowledgment of the blessings already received by faith. The teaching of Ritualism is precisely the same as the Church of Rome as to salvation, and if it be true, the Church of England is guilty of the sin of schism, and the Reformation was a great and awful evil, resulting in the delusion of millions of souls."

Another writes: "Uniformity, even as regards a Divine pattern, though not to be undervalued, must not be confounded with 'the unity of the Spirit.' The former may be manufactured by man and exist as a lifeless form, but the latter is a living fact made true by God Himself to all believers—to be manifested in turn by them in the power of the Holy Ghost."

Christ's Call to His Disciples.

"Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee."—Eph. v. 14.
"Let them that love Him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might."—Judges v. 31.

Words and Music by Beatrice M. Hurditch.

Rev. John Pugh, Cardiff.

THE subject of this sketch was born in 1846 at New Mill, a little place nestling among the hills of Montgomeryshire. Like most children of Welsh parents, he received religious instruction from his infancy, his father and mother being of the Calvinistic persuasion. In 1860 his family removed to Pembrokeshire, and here it appears he sowed the "wild oats" of his youth. Boyish frivolities, however, were soon replaced by the contemplation of matters of more serious moment. When barely out of his teens he became a Church member, and revealed the sincerity of his conversion by commencing Gospel meetings for the people in the open air.

His success in this direction caused his friends to induce him to devote his whole time to the ministry. He passed into Trevecca College in 1869, and after three years of preparation entered upon his life work. In 1872 he accepted a call to Tredegar, situate in the midst of the great ironworks district, with its vast and increasing population. At that time the little church was in its infancy, the membership being only sixteen. After a hard and strenuous effort of nine years, 400 members had been added, while the Sunday-school had an average attendance of 450. This result, though gratifying, was but a faint augury of the fulness and richness of the Divine blessing which rested upon his work in after years. He resigned the charge of Tredegar in 1881, and left to become pastor of a much smaller church at Pontypridd. The sacrifice was not in vain, for here, too, he was eminently successful in building up the Church of God, and extending his kingdom.

At the close of an eight years' ministry in Pontypridd he entered Cardiff—the great metropolis of Wales — where he has since laboured. While pastor of the English Presbyterian Church in Clifton-street, he began the evangelistic movement the effects of which have been felt not only in Cardiff itself, or in the denomination to which he belongs, but throughout the whole Principality.

Obtaining the co-operation of Mr. Seth Joshua—then a successful evangelist at Neath—Mr. Pugh, in April, 1891, commenced work at East Moors, one of the most needy parts of Cardiff. At this place there was not accommodation in the chapels and churches for 2000 people, while the population was a little over 20,000. The evangelists, stripping themselves of their ministerial garb, put up their borrowed tent. The spectacle of two ministers in their shirt sleeves handling rope and mallet, was one which had its attraction for others than the habitual curiosity-mongers. The people discovering their object, felt that the sympathy was real. On the first Sabbath there was a good attendance. Children clad and in rags, dirty and otherwise, sought admission in large numbers. This necessitated, shortly afterwards, the erection of a children's tent close by. At the very outset there were conversions among young and old.

From this central point the circumference daily and visibly widened. The tent was replaced by a wooden building, which in its turn was followed by a permanent hall accommodating a thousand. The movement after this was one of almost unparalleled success in the history of modern missions at home. Space does not permit us to enter into details, but we may briefly review the work from the time of its unpretentious beginning in April, 1891, up to its present stage.

In June of that year, work was commenced at Canton, another part of Cardiff, in a tent, and in Clive-road a third centre was opened out. In less than three years a school hall for 550, and a mission hall for 1200 were put up in the one place; and a children's hall for 400, and mission hall for 650 in the other. This year two new centres have been opened in Cardiff, a hall accommodating 1000, and an iron building seating 400. Thus in Cardiff itself five halls have been erected during the four years' work there, and they are well filled every Sunday evening. In addition to the schoolrooms, there are also vestries and class rooms, and in these meetings of various kinds are conducted, while at the same time a preaching service is being held in the main building.

To-day there are in connection with this forward movement thirteen working centres in Glamorganshire and Monmouthshire, one in Oswestry, and one for the Welsh-speaking population in London. When we think of the teeming population of the Rhondda and Rhymney Valleys, there must be thousands who are to-day praising God for the existence of this effort. Although it is by no means an easy task to continue a great work like this, the heavy responsibilities of the present have not crushed out the desire to open out new spheres of labour. Three additional sites have been chosen in Cardiff and four in Newport. At the latter place work was begun only a few months back, and already there are over one hundred converts, and one of the largest halls in the town is filled Sabbath by Sabbath. In addition to the work in Wales, an attack upon the large industrial centres is contemplated. Liverpool and Manchester have been selected as sites for operation; and a great extension of effort for the rescue of fallen women in Cardiff is about to be entered upon.

The work from its commencement has been carried out on the broadest possible basis. Like most philanthropic works of a similar extent, it has associated itself with a religious body, and yet has never been held by the tether of denominationalism. Much has been done for the evangelisation of the people at home and abroad.

IN THE HOMES OF THE POOR.

WORK AT MILDMAY.

ONCE again, with winter stealing in upon us, we remember the poor, and a few sketches, taken on the dark side of London life, of the present state of things in some of the cold and bare homes, will enable those who are better off to realize somewhat of the need, towards which they are now earnestly asked to minister. The distribution of the "Winter Relief" Fund is entrusted to the Mildmay Deaconesses, who most carefully consider and personally enquire into every case, and bring with the relief the glad message of life and love in Jesus, made the more real and welcome by these tokens of Christian concern on their behalf, ministered "for his name sake."

The want of nourishing food is the prevailing need, and friends kindly disposed to help may be assured that, as a first necessity, food will be provided for the hungry, as far as the means sent will go.

LIFE SKETCHES.

"It's not that I eat much," said an old woman of seventy. "I have my breakfast, an early tea, and a peppermint before I go to bed." This remark brought unexpected help to our old friend from an unexpected quarter, proving the goodness of our God in his care for his own. Some days afterwards, when asked if she was feeling better for her extra food, her face brightened as she replied, "Oh, yes, miss, don't you see how much better I look? I feel as if I had a new lining inside me," and with great glee she showed her bit of meat stewing in the pot. A little further help would greatly brighten the wintry days, and probably save a return to these unsubstantial "peppermint suppers."

An old man, over sixty, suffering from bad leg, trying to walk from Islington to Whitechapel to his day's work. Wife paralysed, sitting up to call him at 4 a.m. Very thrifty people.

A needy family—father out of work, mother always ill, her illness aggravated by anxiety and want of proper nourishment, six children, the youngest with shoeless feet.

A daughter, striving to support an invalid mother on very small earnings, not able to buy what the doctor orders, and with the cry, "How we are to live this winter, I cannot tell."

Poor old "Granny" suffering much from the cold, as a fire in the room is a rare luxury, her bed-covering of the scantiest description, eked out with apiece of clean sacking.

A "veteran member" of one of the missions, her scanty allowance only providing the barest necessaries; suffering from frequent attacks of bronchitis, but "esteeming God's Word more than her necessary food."

Match-box makers, who, by working hard all day, can only earn a pittance (1s. 2d. for seven gross), and others sadly underpaid, and consequently underfed. A poor wife, for example, lining and binding bedroom slippers at a halfpenny per pair.

Will each reader send something to cheer and uplift perishing ones, for his sake Who has dealt so bountifully with us? Gifts will be gratefully received by Mrs. E. Codner, Conference Hall Office, Mildmay Park, London, N.

HOUSE OF REST.—Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, the principal speaker at the monthly meeting last Friday afternoon, showed that decision for Christ involved a twofold separation for the Christian—he must be separated from all things displeasing to the Saviour, and separated unto joy and peace in Him. The purpose of this separation was holiness; God could do nothing in a soul that was not wholly and completely separated unto Him. In the evening Lieut.-Col. Oldham gave an address on John x. 1-11.

PERUVIAN EXPERIENCES.

Dear Friend,—My last letter would hardly prepare you for the news I have to send you in this letter, but the strange thing often happens, and dull ordinary lives are sometimes disturbed in their flow by events as startling as they are sudden. Briefly the history of the last three months has been, a sad farewell to Lima and Callao, a long journey to Cuzco, a dangerous sickness, six weeks of anxiety for our safety, a stern fight with the authorities, a final order of expulsion from Cuzco, a three weeks' journey through the interior, a welcome back to Lima, ending with being married.

I told you in my last letter something about the journey to Cuzco and the tronble we were having there. All that the judges, lawyers, and business men of the city did in our favour proved of no avail, and in spite of a medical certificate saying I was unfit to travel for fourteen days, we were ordered, in writing, to leave within twenty-four hours. We took little notice of this, it being the third time the prefect had ordered us to leave; but a few hours before our time was up I was in the "prefectura" talking to one of the officials when the prefect saw me and called me. He wanted to know if we were ready. I said no; we had not got horses and we had been unable to arrange our affairs. He got very excited, and said when our time was up we should be put out. In less than four hours we had to buy horses, put what few things we needed for the journey into saddle-bags, arrange what little we could, and clear out.

We left the city in the midst of great rejoicings. A great procession had been organised to thank God (and the prefect) for the expulsion of the heretics. The soldiers were all under arms, expecting a fight, for our friends had become very much stirred over the action of the priests and prefect. Crowds were waiting to see us pass under the escort that the prefect had so kindly (?) provided, bells were ringing, and crackers were being fired. It was a demonstration put up by the clergy and the prefect to make it look as though our lives were in danger, and they were kind enough to give us military protection. We fortunately escaped it all by stealing out the back way, having before determined to travel overland to Oroza. We wanted to see the interior, and we have seen it. It was a journey of nineteen days' hard travelling, and considering my condition, it is remarkable that I came through it.

We left Cuzco on August 22, reaching Lima September 11. The whole journey was amongst the mountains, sometimes amongst the snow, sometimes in tropical valleys; but the changes were so frequent that we seldom went a day without going from heat to cold or vice versa, and sometimes changed three times in one day. We travelled alone and carried only a few blankets, and sometimes a little food. We travelled through regions where we would not see a sign of human life the whole day; at other times we would pass many Indian towns. Our condition when we reached Lima was deplorable; "weather-beaten" would hardly describe it, for although only slightly marked the small-pox was still apparent, and the snows, and wind, and rain, and sun, and dirt had combined to change us considerably.

Flossie [Miss Soloman, one of the Doric Lodge deaconesses] and I were married Sept. 25, and we are now staying for a week at Chorrillos. A goodly number of friends came to the wedding, and I need not say what a happy day it was for me. God will surely bless our union. We are here to serve Him, and we desire his glory.

We have found that the authorities in Lima have been a good deal troubled concerning our case. We find that the prefect overstepped his orders, being evidently under the power of the priests. The case is now before the Government. The Cuzco representatives are asking for permission for us to return with guarantees and help, this being the only satisfaction the Cuzco people will accept. They also ask the dismissal of the prefect, and that the bishop be instructed to prevent the clergy preaching against us. If we get these concessions it will be a big step towards liberty of worship. We have nothing to do but to wait events, for the case is between the Cuzco people and the Government. Our minister has taken up the case also; under his instructions we wrote an account of the affair, also our monetary losses in connection with it, and he is claiming damages from the Government for an outrage on British subjects. Dr. Woods is very much interested in the case, and is working hard with us.—Yours sincerely, John L. Jarrett.

Chorrillos, Sept. 30.

AUSTRIA AND ITS NEEDS.

It makes one's heart ache to see the state of Austria. I have been in nearly every country in Europe, and know something of the work and the workers in every country, but I can truly say that I know of no country where there is so little being done to spread the truth, and where the needs are greater than here. From Graz to Fiume, a distance of nearly 240 miles, I know of only one Protestant worker. From Fiume southward along the coast, with its islands, its towns, and its villages, for a still greater distance, there does not seem to be a single worker. In Fiume itself, with its more than 20,000 inhabitants, and its great and increasing shipping, there is not, as far as I can hear, a single worker either for young or old. Yet 4000 British sailors visit this port yearly.

The people are in utter darkness, and are being so left in hundreds of large towns and thousands of scattered villages, and, one may say, millions of lonely homes. It is impossible to think of finding Christian workers personally to reach them all. It is almost impossible to think of reaching them even with Christian tracts. Were tract-distribution allowed, which it is not, and were workers to be found at once to go from town to town and home to home giving these silent but welcome messengers, yet years must pass before they could be given to all.

There is, as far as I can see, only one way at present open to spread the Gospel in this land, that is, through the newspapers. Texts and clear Gospel messages can be inserted in large numbers of these by anyone who is willing to pay for them. This is an exceedingly cheap way of spreading the truth. Five shillings will, in most cases, send a very clear and distinct message into as many thousand homes. It may be asked, but will the people read such messages? Indeed they will. They have so little reading, and so little money to buy any, and in many cases so little opportunity to buy it, that when they get hold of any, be it newspaper or what it may, they read it from the first letter to the last.

Is there no one who ought to do this? Is there no Society interested in Continental work that will do it? The way is open. A few friends and myself sent such messages into about 4,000,000 homes and convents and monasteries a few years ago, and could have gone on doing the same with other messages year by year, only we did not succeed in getting others interested in the matter, and we could not well advertise it, or even write much about it in Christian papers, else the Roman Catholics or the Jews might have been aroused to fight against the work, even more than they were. Not having the help we expected from others, we had finally to give up the work, except so far as our own means permitted us from time to time to insert a brief message in some few of the many papers open to us.

Should anyone feel interested in spreading the Gospel thus, I will gladly give any further information about it. Letters addressed to me, care of Rev. Dr. Prochet, 107, Via Nazionale, Rome, will find me for the next few weeks. Trusting that this may arouse some to pray for this neglected land, and, may be, even to work for it.

Fiume. J. D. Kilburn.

POOR JEWS AND THE SCRIPTURES.

The Jewish people are little understood by Gentile races, and even numbers of the most sympathetic Christians, "Israelites indeed," labour under curious misapprehensions regarding them. It is commonly thought that every Jew must be familiar with the ancestral Hebrew tongue, and almost as generally believed that they are all acquainted with the Old Testament Scriptures. As a fact, only a small percentage have an intelligent knowledge of Hebrew, or of the writings of Moses and the Prophets. It should not be surprising that popular ignorance of the sacred language has deepened as the generations have passed; and as Hebrew has, notwithstanding, continued to be the medium of religious worship, it is easy to understand that, from a spiritual point of view, God's ancient people should be "destroyed for lack of knowledge."

The every-day speech of the Jews varies according to the countries in which they reside, and that speech is more or less distinct and pure in proportion to the degree of education enjoyed. Among poor Jews, however, the ordinary medium of conversation is a jargon, based on mediæval German, and including some words from Hebrew and others from Sclav forms of speech. This hybrid language, a market and domestic growth rather than a national development, is known as Yiddish (i.e. Jewish) and is to-day, as it has been for generations, with modifications, the colloquial medium throughout Germany, Russia, Austria, and among the Jews who from those centres have wandered further west. It were vain to preach to ghetto Jews in the language of the synagogue; the ghetto language, in its formless simplicity, must be employed. Weak means may serve great ends when consecrated to God's service.

Mr. Marcus S. Bergmann, of Bow, E., an agent of the London City Mission, has for years been acting upon this conviction. Others have rendered the Scriptures into Judeo-German, substantially modern German printed in Hebrew character; and an admirable version, which must prove acceptable over a wide field, was prepared by the late Rev. James Adler for the Trinitarian Bible Society. Of this edition the New Testament and the Pentateuch are already in circulation. Mr. Bergmann, however, is producing the Scriptures in a less polished speech. His undertaking is fully explained in a booklet, by Mr. A. S. Day, entitled "A Crying Need" (6d. Marshall Bros.), where his work is described thus: "It is neither Low Yiddish—for we eliminate all the Sclav words and wrong pronunciations of German words—nor is it High German, for we only aimed at bringing out the elementary rules of grammar, so that the simplest, uneducated Jewess may understand the Word of God." That is, his work is in a purified Yiddish, suited for uneducated Jews throughout Eastern Europe and in industrial centres of the West. Rev. A. Bernstein, B.D., of the London Jews Society, is revising the work, which has been spoken of in terms of high commendation by missionaries at home and abroad. Already the greater part of the Old Testament has been stereotyped, and the Pentateuch and Psalms published and circulated; also 10,000 copies of our Lord's "Sermon on the Mount."

The shepherds of Israel have, alas! dispensed chaff and not wheat among the flock; hence there is a hungering for the Word of God. Mr. Bergmann's endeavour is to enable his brethren to "read in the book of the Law of God distinctly"; he "gives the sense, and causes them to understand the reading" (Neh. viii. 7, 8). So far he has had funds sufficient to proceed steadily with his task, self-imposed and honorary, but he will require a considerable sum to complete a first edition of the entire Old Testament, and print a further edition of the Pentateuch and Psalms. The funds are administered by a committee, the treasurer of which is Mr. W. Godsell, 18, Ridgway-place, Wimbledon.

"The Bridge of Hope"

RATCLIFF HIGHWAY, LONDON, E.

A PLAIN STATEMENT.

For more than 16 years we have been carrying on this most difficult work in the very poorest parish of East London.

From the nature of the work, it is not one which we care constantly to bring under public notice.

It is work which involves much strain upon nerve and heart, and entails for its guidance, ceaseless personal supervision.

IT IS DISTINCTLY MISSIONARY WORK among the most needy, the most helpless, and the most hopeless.

THOUSANDS have passed through our Refuge and Homes, and, at the present time, our family consists of upwards of 200 girls and children, besides the more casual inmates of the shelter.

We have 60 young women (nearly all under 20 years of age) in training for domestic service and other work.

Towards their own support last year they earned £600. We cannot increase this sum, and still receive the same needy class, or the work would entirely lose its Missionary character.

We have a NIGHT SHELTER most carefully worked. During last year we gave 4901 NIGHTS' LODGINGS and dealt with 920 INDIVIDUAL CASES.

Besides which, there are several small COTTAGE HOMES, containing 140 little girls. Many of them, with hundreds of others, have been rescued from the most vicious surroundings, where they had, humanly speaking, no chance in life, and would almost inevitably, as they grew up, have joined the black army of the lost.

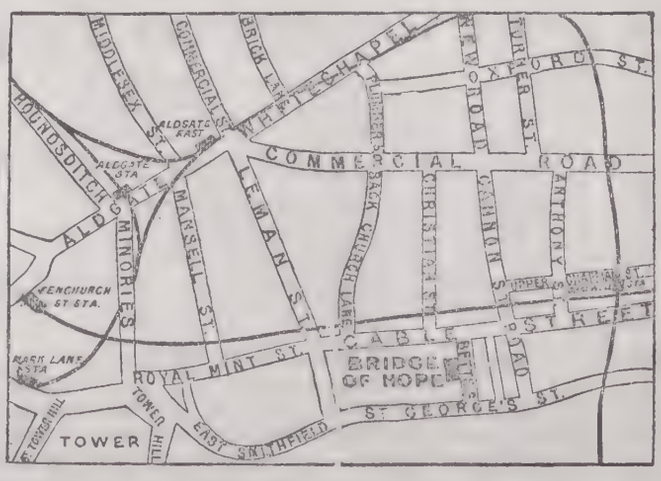
From these Children's Homes, we are already gathering very precious fruit, and as our children take their places in the world, we believe this will be multiplied a thousand-fold.

To carry on this work, even with the utmost economy, just £4000 A YEAR IS NEEDED.

We may not calculate the results of our Rescue Work, but dare we do so, we know there would be no mean return for labour and money expended in souls saved, and lives made holy and useful in Christian service.

We have laboured night and day to avoid debt.

Perhaps the most heart-breaking part of our work has been to refuse help to the helpless, and hope to the hopeless, when funds have failed.



We have never been in greater straits than at the present moment. We need money for this week's food.

Surely if God's people knew our need, and more fully realised their responsibilities, they would not allow this struggle to find bread for our household to become so acute, and our hands would be set free for the more direct service among the lost, which is at once the duty to which we have been called, and the greatest joy of our lives.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

The eighteenth anniversary of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, was celebrated on Friday last by meetings of workers and friends.

The afternoon meeting was presided over by Mr. T. B. Miller, who read from Isaiah vi., and emphasised the fact that this was written of a true servant of God, and showed God's way of preparing a man for his service, bringing him down to the place of nothingness, and causing him to confess that he is "undone." There is such a thing as religious flesh which has to be dealt with, the vitality of evil within; but after God has dealt with him he is ready to be sent forth. "Here am I; send me."

Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. sec., gave a brief account of the year's work, stating that during that period 14,000 seamen had visited the Rest, 670 English Gospel meetings had been held, besides 86 in German, 113 in Scandinavian, 124 Bible-classes for Christian men, and 110 open-air meetings. He stated that, notwithstanding the fact that all help was given gratuitously, the whole of the expenses not exceeding £320, there was a deficiency to be made up of £60. He also asked for contributions of suitable literature for sailors' reading. A new organ is also required, the old one having been in daily use for eighteen years.

Mrs. M. Baxter gave a short helpful address from Heb. ii. 1 and Ex. xxxiv. 29. Some practical and inspiring words were also spoken by Rev. Chas. Brown (Ferme Park, Hornsey), and Rev. Douglas Hooper (from East Africa).

Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided at the evening meeting, and recalled one or two interesting personal reminiscences of the late beloved Reginald Radcliffe, who had so much to do with the founding of the "Rest." In view of what many feel to be the nearness of the coming of our Lord, he emphasised the importance of increased vigilance and earnestness on the part of all Christian workers.

Mr. Isaac gave further particulars about the work, remarking that every day out of the 365 the Gospel is proclaimed to the sailors who come into the Rest, and the workers are constantly being cheered by the receipt of letters from men in all parts of the world, testifying to the saving and keeping power of God, and full of gratitude for the good influences under which they have been brought at the Rest.

Rev. F. T. Snow spoke on the words "Workers together with God," pointing out first of all the danger of the tendency which there often is to think more of the work being done, than of Christ Himself whose work it is. He dwelt upon the encouraging fact that all workers are co-operators with God in the extension of his kingdom, as well as being linked one to another in serving and being linked to their one Master.

Dr. Harry Guinness spoke some hearty words of commendation of Mr. and Mrs. George Knapman, who have both passed through a period of training in connection with the East London Institute, and are now going out to Zanzibar to take charge of the Strangers' Rest there. Mr. and Mrs. Knapman followed with some words of testimony, showing how they had been serving God in the past, and how He has been leading them until now, when He is sending them to Zanzibar.

The workers at the Rest propose this year, as usual, to provide Christmas fare for about two thousand people on Boxing-day, and they will be very glad to receive supplies of puddings, rounds of beef, etc. Any quantity of such articles as mufflers, scarves, socks, helmets, steering gloves, etc., will also be acceptable for decorating the Christmas tree, and distributing to the seamen who gather together within the hospitable walls of the Rest at the festive season. Parcels should be addressed to Mr. Isaac, at the Rest, 163, St. George's-street, E., from whom also copies of the new annual report may be obtained by any friends desiring them.

THE SCRIPTURE GIFT MISSION.

By invitation of the Archdeacon of London, a number of ladies and gentlemen interested in the broadcast circulation of the Scriptures met in conference on Friday evening last at the Chapter House, St. Paul's Churchyard. The object was to hear a statement by Mr. W. Walters on the work of the Scripture Gift Mission, and to devise measures for its further support and extension. Archdeacon Sinclair, who presided, spoke of the object as worthy of hearty sympathy, and highly commended the self-denying energies of the founder of the work. As is well known, the Mission circulates Gospels with illustrations of Oriental scenes and customs.

Addresses were given by Col. G. Phillips, Major Money Kyrle, and Mr. B. G. Sinclair, who gave the work a cordial support, telling of instances in which Roman Catholics as well as Protestants have eagerly received and read the tastefully-printed Illustrated Gospels. Amongst soldiers also they have been circulated with much encouragement.

In the course of the meeting several suggestions were made, by means of which interest in the work might be increased. Ladies and others were asked to arrange drawing-room meetings; ministers were asked to assist in the establishment of local auxiliaries; and it was shown that those possessed of wealth might help by bearing, in whole or part, the cost of editions, in various languages, of portions of Scripture not yet produced by the Mission. Finally, a committee was appointed to assist Mr. Walters in the development and administration of the work.

Mr. Walters, in telling the story of the Mission, showed that from small beginnings it now issues Gospels in six languages, and missionaries from all parts tell of blessed results from their distribution. A recent undertaking is the Gospel of John in Modern Greek, for circulation in the Levant, the expense being borne by a generous lady. Since the meeting just described, another lady has made a substantial contribution towards an edition of fifty thousand copies of the Epistle to the Romans in English. This, like all the other publications, will be illustrated, and it is confidently believed that it will prove of great service to Evangelical truth. It is wanted in Roman Catholic centres; it is also wanted where Ritualism prevails; it should do something to invigorate unspiritual Protestantism.

Further particulars of the work may be had from Mr. Walters, 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

Rev. W. J. Mayers, Deputation Secretary, has completed a successful tour of meetings in Sussex. He has addressed crowded audiences in Hayward's Heath, Uckfield, Framfield, Buxted, Lewes, Seaford, and Newhaven. He was received with special warmth in Brighton also, where large numbers assembled in the Dome and elsewhere, and showed great interest in the story of the work, and the practical illustration of its good effects, as exhibited by the well-trained boys, who gave their musical selections with much skill. Liberal offerings were given at all the meetings.

On Wednesday week, Mr. Mayers lectured to a great assembly in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, under the presidency of Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, on "Child Life in Slum-land." The illustrative lime-light views were much enjoyed. Mr. Mayers gave some interesting reminiscences of the late Mr. Spurgeon's interest in the Homes. The collection amounted to about £50, and a generous friend, as a thank-offering for his 70th birthday, handed to the chairman a note for £100.

BIBLES FOR THE BLIND,—May I suggest to those who delight in spreading the pure Word of God, that gifts of Bible-books, printed in the Braille system by the British and Foreign Bible Society, would be a Christmas joy to several blind children, who, though they are taught Holy Scripture and the Braille system of reading, do not possess the sacred books on account of their high price. I am personally interested in some such children, and should any of your readers care to help in this would they please communicate with me (Miss) C. L. Harton.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

Mr. Thomas Richardson, who is carrying on a splendid work for the Lord at Rotherhithe, in which he has been greatly blessed, has concluded a month's special services in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. Mr. Richardson was converted at one of Mr. Moody's meetings in the old hall in Bow-road on Mr. Moody's first visit to this country. He immediately joined Mr. Charrington's work, and until he accepted the invitation to superintend the Rotherhithe Gospel Mission has always identified himself with every effort put forth at the Great Assembly Hall for the extension of the Master's Kingdom. It was, therefore, little wonder that when our brother was announced to preach for the month, not only the ordinary congregation, but numbers of outsiders came to hear him.

The attendances during his mission were above the average, and Sunday nights were crowded. Mr. Richardson's success as a preacher is not only to be attributed to his earnest, zealous way of proclaiming the Gospel, but his well-studied and thought-out addresses. He was greatly blessed, both to the Lord's children and to others. One Sunday night the brother of a well-known freethinker and public man of Mile End was among the anxious in the inquiry-room, and that night he left praising God for saving him. He said, "he had been anxious for a long time, but had never had it put so plainly and forcibly as Mr. Richardson had done that night."

God has greatly blessed the evangelistic work in the Great Assembly Hall this year, and it is a standing proof of the power of God in the salvation of precious souls. On the closing night of his mission, the people gathered round Mr. Richardson, and bid him God-speed in his own work, and praised God for the manner in which He had used him in his month's mission.

FACTORY HELPERS' UNION.

Passing out the other day from the dining-room of a large factory in South-East London, where a bright Gospel service had been held during the last half of the dinner-hour, by kind permission of the employer, the secretary noticed a group of girls. Recognising some, she said, "How is it we never see you at the Institute now?" "Oh, we ain't a coming with 'em 'ere toffs," was the blunt reply. Grasping the situation, she quickly asked, "If we have some evenings especially for you will you come?" "Yes, miss, you try us," was the chorus shouted back, and they kept their word.

The hearts of the workers are full of praise as their thoughts go back to a noisy meeting three years ago, when a tea was given to the very girls now described by the mates as "toffs" (their own phraseology for anyone superior), and who then indulged in such rough play and free fighting that the Institute had to be closed. Under the loving influence of the superintendent and her niece, and God's blessing on the efforts put forth, there has come not only outward change, but real change of heart and life to many. These have now been made Y.W.C.A. members in order to make room for the rougher girls.

Ladies are greatly needed who will give up one hour a week to carry the glad news of salvation into the many factories open for such work. Will any willing to do so communicate with the hon. sec., Miss Skirrow, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, London, W.?

BIBLE WORK IN BURMAH.

Rev. J. S. Aaron, of Yamethen, Upper Burmah, writing to Mr. J. C. Smith, of Newport, N.B., says:—

The Bible work in this place, and in the interior, has been blessed by God. Joshua, our Bible-reader, went with me lately to a place called Tonghoo, where we preached the Word of God and his salvation to a great number of coolies in the open-air. They listened to us carefully and received tracts from us to read. Joshua is also helping me in the school work, in teaching Bible truths to the heathen children, and he has a Sunday-school in connection with it. Please God, we intend baptizing two heathen adults about the beginning of next month. I trust you will not forget to remember our school, as well as our Bible work among the heathens of this place.

AGGRESSIVE WORK.—17.

Whilst journeying a few days ago in one of the long saloon carriages on the Electric Railway here, which was fairly filled with passengers, I availed myself of the opportunity of asking aloud how many of us had our souls saved, and knew it, and remarked at the same time that this was one of the simplest questions under the sun. That the Bible said, "Wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein" (Isaiah xxxv. 8). The most important parts of Scripture were the simplest. The Saviour said, "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life," and Paul said, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus" (Rom. viii. 1). So that there could be no excuse for us if we were neglecting the matter, and I believed more people were being lost by neglect than anything else, and so on.

In the centre of the carriage sat three very respectable-looking seafaring young men, who appeared to treat the matter with great levity, and said they had got bodies to look after, and no time for the other sort of thing.

I replied that I was a business man, but would be extremely foolish to neglect my soul because I had a business to attend to; that one should be done and the other not left undone.

A man on the left now spoke, and with stentorian voice began preaching Jesus, at the same time handing tracts about. What he said was excellent. Then an elderly man stood up and continued speaking on the same lines, so that the scene became rather an extraordinary one for a railway carriage, until we reached the next station, when I left them at it. There are many people on the Lord's side nowadays, and we may frequently reckon upon receiving the sympathy of some friend round about when speaking for Jesus, which is most encouraging.

Upon another occasion I entered an ordinary third class carriage, on the L. and N. W. Railway, which then contained nine of us. The day was warm, and the windows both closed.

I asked if we might drop the window a little for some fresh air, remarking that fresh grace was even better than fresh air; one man agreed with me. I then asked how many of us were conscious of being under the influence of Divine grace, and found four out of the nine were. I at once suggested that we should have an experience meeting, for God's glory and the benefit of those in the carriage unsaved, and it was readily agreed to.

The first man said he was saved nine years ago under a powerful sermon, which drove him to the penitent form, where the matter was eventually settled, and he got peace. The second man said he could not remember the time when God's Spirit did not strive with him from his youth upwards. At length he commenced reading a chapter in the Bible with his family every Sunday afternoon. One day whilst thus engaged he looked round on his little ones and the thought came to him, What about my children, and where will they spend their eternity? There and then he gave his heart to God.

The third man had been brought in eleven years before through affliction—God had dealt with him often during his youth, and finally he surrendered under a heavy calamity, the death of his young wife, and he dated his conversion from the day of her death.

And the fourth man had been a happy joyous believer in the Saviour for many years. I forget what means he said the Lord used in bringing him to himself, but I remember full well how his words appeared to well up from his heart as from a deep fountain of living waters. He then pointed to a friend who was with him, but who had not spoken, and said, "Yes, and he also knew the Lord once"—the word once was spoken sorrowfully. I appealed to the poor backslider to return to the loving Master, and almost immediately we found ourselves at the railway terminus.

It was a blessed time, not easily to be forgotten. We then separated, never, perhaps, to meet again until we gather around the throne in the presence of the King in his beauty. D. M. Drysdale.

RESTORED AND KEPT.

To prove to you the truth contained in your remarks on "The Insane," in a recent number of The Christian, I feel led to give you a brief account of God's loving and merciful dealings with myself. I have had several attacks of mania. Nearly seven years ago the Lord restored me after two and a-half years of deep melancholia. The message of balm and healing came through his own Word; it was this: "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit, a broken and contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise." The sense of his pardon and tender love once more possesses my soul.

Four years ago I felt symptoms of an acute attack coming on, but my Divine Master's grace enabled me to take this cup once more from his hands. He was with me while passing through the waters, and by the end of six months He had completely restored me, and I was discharged from the asylum in which I had been placed. Since that time my life has been one of perfect peace and rest in the Lord. He keeps me free from all care, darkness, and fear, and that notwithstanding my knowledge of the fact that another, and in all probability fatal, attack may come on at any time. His Word is my stay, comfort, and delight, He Himself my salvation and life all in all. Were this not the case I should, no doubt, still be an inmate of an asylum, as I could never bear the burden of life with a tottering brain without his sustaining grace and power. There can be no resting-place but Christ Himself for the weakened and disordered mind. He alone can heal, guard, and keep the souls of his suffering lunatic children.

We sorely need the sympathy and prayers of God's people, and their ministry as doctors and attendants; when these are given great and mighty things will be shown to us. Let me plead earnestly with you on behalf of my suffering brothers and sisters. We are "the greatest of earth's sufferers," and I think the most neglected "lunacy" means not only terrible suffering, but loss of friends, liberty, home, reputation, means. We Christians are verily guilty, like Israel of old, of the great sin of limiting God's power. There is nothing too hard for the Lord, and He will do great and marvellous things for us, if we cease from dependence on an arm of flesh, and trust to Him alone. E. C.

CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTION SOCIETY.

In connection with this Society, a drawing-room meeting was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. F. Yeats Edwards, Cromwell House, Hampstead, on Friday evening last, Dr. R. F. Horton presiding. Several of the deaconesses of the Society gave interesting reports of their work among the London poor. Rev. H. J. Shirley, Mr. Thomas Dence, the treasurer of the Society, and Sir W. Brampton Gurdon spoke. Dr. Horton very heartily commended the object, and suggested that the practical result of the meeting should be the appointment of a committee of ladies to secure sufficient funds for the support of a deaconess in connection with some poor church.

At present there are twenty-one deaconesses employed, and the number is being increased as applications are received from the different districts. No application is refused where one-half the salary is guaranteed by a church, but the committee are compelled to decline many applications where such a guarantee cannot be given. The work is undenominational, and help is greatly needed. Rev. R. Mackay, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., is secretary

"THE CHRISTIAN TREASURY."—This monthly magazine, conducted now for some years by Rev. F. B. Meyer, will be enlarged with the New Year, and with it will be incorporated The Christ Church Magazine. The publishers will be The Sunday School Union, Ludgate Hill, and Mr. Meyer continues his work as editor.

COMBINING REST AND WORK.

Dear Sir,—Amongst your readers there may be some who are thinking of wintering abroad, and wishing to hear of places open to quiet work.

A friend writes from a lovely place in the Alpes Maritimes: "Anyone not very strong would soon feel different here. There are nice rooms from eight to ten or twelve francs a day. The poor women want a sewing meeting. Yesterday I had 100 'Le Rélèvement' from Marseilles; they were all gone in the evening, as well as Testaments and books. I am writing for another hundred now. One man ran out of the little inn to ask for a book, and his wife called after him, 'Bring me one.' I had a long day at Villafranche, and nice chats with some of the fisher-folk, mending their nets in the sunshine. Soon the war ships will come in, and one longs for at least a testament for each sailor, but that means hundreds."

Mrs. Shipton's books are much appreciated. I gave the landlady "Tell Jesus."* She said afterwards, "Now I am asking the Lord to send people to this house, because of "Tell Jesus." Another, a Spiritist, took "The Hearing Heart" to read.

A copy of "Tell Jesus" had also been given to a young woman who, when in despair and on the point of self-destruction, was saved, and led into the way of peace.

The French translations of Anna Shipton's books may be obtained from Sach La Fontaine, and the German from Spitzler, Basle. The Lord has signally owned them in blessing to souls, whilst in England they have not lost their power to carry heaven-sent messages of life and comfort to the weary, the tempted, and the perplexed. One to whom "Waiting Hours" * was given, wrote:—"You have sent me a wonderful book: after the Bible, I have read nothing like it."—Yours sincerely,

M. S. Osborn-Howe.

MISS LEIGH'S HOMES.

We have lately heard of several distressing cases, where English governesses have been inveigled over to Paris on false pretences of employment. To avoid grave consequences Miss Ada Leigh's Homes in Paris, 77, Avenue Wagram, offer a sure protection. A free registry is kept, and strict inquiries are made respecting situations offered, and a kindly interest and watchful care is extended to the young girls when they have been placed in situations. The work of the Homes is undenominational, all English-speaking girls and women being helped in every possible way.

Owing to the lapsing of the late M. Galignani's legacy to the orphanage of £300, Mrs. Travers Lewis and the directors find an increased burden on their shoulders. This orphanage is now in full and blessed use, the little English waifs in Paris being trained for the service of Christ. The usual outdoor mission work among the English working classes is being resumed for the winter with mission hall services, soup kitchen, mothers' meetings, temperance and band of hope meetings. Many, surely, will count it a privilege to help in such ways as they can. Rhoda Mouncey.

A VILLAGE WORK.—A small company of Christians living in the villages of Dorney, Lake End, and Cippenham, who, with their forefathers before them, have been worshipping in barns, sheds, open air, and farm kitchens for ninety-two years, are, at the end of this year to lose the barn (in which they have met for the last thirty-four years), because the farm has passed into other hands. I ask, on their behalf, the assistance of those who sympathise with unsectarian worship and faithful Gospel preaching. In the present case it is not to add one more to a number of existing chapels, as there is nothing for the people but Ritualistic teaching. Hitherto the expenses of the meetings and Sunday-school have been met locally, but now help is urgently needed for a mission hall. A piece of ground in a central position has been bought and about £8 subscribed towards the building, which, if only made of iron and wood, would cost £50. A poor woman living in a sheep waggon and working in the fields, one of the fruits of the work, gave the first sixpence. The rest of the congregation, consisting entirely of working people, have done their utmost.

LEPERS IN INDIA.

MRS. OSBORNE, of Trevandrum, writes to Mr. Bailey, Superintendent of the Mission to Lepers:—

"A fresh and pressing need has sprung up. On all sides these poor lepers are begging to be taught reading. They see the improvement in the twenty now learning, and all long to share in it. Then, as if to meet that want, a young leper was admitted a few weeks ago. He has been remarkably well educated, and, I believe, is a Christian. He is about twenty-two years of age, and is almost broken-hearted at being banished to this living tomb, and begs most piteously for aid in some way. While thinking and praying about him it struck us that if we could employ him to teach the others, what he was paid for it would enable him to get the remedies he is so anxious to use for the alleviation of his own sufferings. They are praying to be taught, and here is one well qualified to teach them, and who must in any case live amongst them.

"Another need which is constantly pressing itself upon me is a little home, where the young children of lepers, who are as yet free from the taint of leprosy, may be placed, and brought up amid healthy surroundings. I am assured by the European doctor that it is quite possible for these little ones to grow up quite healthy if properly cared for from early years. We have now three such, and bonnier, sweeter little dears I have rarely seen, especially a little mite of two years. We were most anxious for these little ones to be removed from such a place, but where could they be sent? Everyone has such a horror of leprosy, that even relatives refuse to have anything to do with either the poor leper or the children. It is impossible for me to take them in unless I have a place specially for them. This small building will cost quite £20, but if young lives are to be spared this appalling doom, such a place must be procured."

These little ones can be supported and educated for about £4 per annum each. The Mission to Lepers has eight such homes now open, besides its thirteen asylums for adult lepers, and the committee hope to be able to respond to Mrs. Osborne's appeal if the state of their finances allow of it. Further information given by the hon. secretary for London and district, Mr. John Jackson, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

SOLDIERS IN JAPAN.

THROUGH the generosity of a friend in England, some help was recently sent to me for work among the Japanese Army. About the same time I learned that a large number of invalided soldiers were being sent to Hakone, a mountain resort not far distant. Being unable to go in person, a native brother, Amano by name, who has recently returned himself from the Army, purchased some religious books, and took them to Hakone for free distribution. He was most cordially received. The purchase of books was supplemented by a donation of tracts by the Tract Societies' committee for Japan. While the soldiers were continually leaving and new ones coming, probably 1350 were there on an average all the time of his stay. Mr. Amano visited from house to house, and at an appointed hour met in his own inn all who wished to ask or hear about Christianity. There is reason to believe that God will surely bless the work done.

THE FRENCH IN MADAGASCAR.

THE Paris correspondent of a daily paper says:—M. Laroche, the newly-appointed Resident-General in Madagascar, is a Protestant. His wife was a Catholic, but changed her religion for his sake. M. Laroche has been instructed to make the Protestant natives feel that they will have the fullest liberty of worship, and that if they live according to their Protestant principles they will meet with French favour. As the clerical party never ceased egging Governments on to invade Madagascar, they are angry with M. Berthelot for having appointed M. Laroche, and express disappointment. As Protestantism is so widely spread among the Hovas, the appointment of M. Laroche shows a desire to govern by moral means as well as by military force.

ITALIAN CHURCH REFORM.

I SHOULD like to draw attention to a few recent particulars of the Italian Church reform movement. From Arrone, Rev. A. Luzzi writes: "I am constantly receiving requests for Bibles, Testaments, and religious tracts, from the peasants of the neighbouring villages; and have remarked how the reading of the Word of God bears fruit by rousing in many a love for evangelical truth, and for our Reformed Church. Undoubtedly some seed falls on stony ground, but part lights on good ground, and by the grace of God we shall reap with joy what we now sow in tears, in the midst of so much difficulty and opposition."

At Papigno, in spite of strong opposition from the Romish priest, the church is being strengthened. This congregation arose from the simple circumstance of a few young men being attracted one Sunday, when taking a holiday trip to Arrone, by the service as conducted there by Count Campello and Signor Luzzi. They entreated for a similar service at Papigno, and greeted the two ministers on their arrival a little while after by a general turn-out of the inhabitants, headed by a brass band.

At Dovádola, where, as soon as funds can be raised, Signor Bruno Bruni will return as minister of the Reformed Church, regular services are carried on, and Sunday-schools opened. On the occasion of Professor Panzacchi's visit to commemorate the 20th of September he was offered a Bible and some pamphlets, which he received with pleasure, and further expressed a lively sympathy with the work of the Reformers.

In a village not far from Naples, whence came a request to Count Campello for a minister, things look extremely hopeful. As many as four hundred were led to desire Reform by the influence of one of their number, who had returned from America. Signor Luzzi, who went to investigate matters, faced opposition from priest and syndic. Three students from the Romish Episcopal Seminary are desirous of entering the Reformed Church. Funds, however, are wanting. Two ex-priests are kept idle, and in a state of semi-starvation, from the same cause. Chapels, or rooms, are also necessary, where the people are too poor to give more than material and labour. Signor Ugo Janni writes:—"There is a field of ample promise, but the men and means for cultivating it are paralysed by want of money. It seems a great responsibility laid on Christian people not to let such an occasion slip, until the day dawns when Italy will manage for herself."

AN ENGLISH PROTESTANT.

PORTUGUESE REFORMED CHURCH.

WE are thankful to be able to report the completion and opening of our new school-house, connected with the "Egreja Lusitana Evangelica" in Oporto. It is a well-built house, with two good-sized schoolrooms, and a smaller room and porter's lodge above. We have sixty boys and fifty girls, but we hope to be able soon to enlarge our number, when we can afford assistant teachers.

The building is on the chapel premises, and cost about £200; £130 were in hand, raised chiefly in Portugal, the remaining £70 are met by two workers in this field, trusting to refund themselves from incoming contributions. We should be most grateful for any help towards this outlay.

Besides daily instruction there are Sunday-school classes which are increasingly attended. One great want is for Sunday-school teachers. Will Christian friends pray for this work?

FRED. W. FLOWER,
Minister in charge.

VILLAGE WORK.—To carry on Christian work in our villages is generally difficult and sometimes very discouraging. In Harrowden, Bedfordshire, one of a group of hamlets, a cottage meeting connected with Cotton End meeting has been carried on for over 100 years under the same roof and connected with the same family. Frequently from fifty to sixty people gather to hear the Word preached. In Cotton End a large hall has recently been completed. The cost, £450, has been raised by contributions from far and near. The walls, however, are bare and the room unfurnished, and without any instrument to assist in the services. Perhaps some readers could help us by sending maps, pictures, texts; should any one have a disused harmonium or organ it would greatly aid the work. W. H. SMITH.

Letter to the Editor.

SUNDAY POSTAL LABOUR.

DEAR SIR,—How is it that so many good people are so thoughtless as deliberately to cause unnecessary work in connection with post-offices on the Lord's Day? Many urge that in some instances posting on Saturday or Sunday cannot be avoided. The "Lord of the Sabbath" Himself is the judge of these letters; but how many thousands of communications are received and despatched on the Lord's Day quite unnecessarily?

If all Christians would give this matter serious consideration, and arrange their correspondence so that Sunday morning delivery and Sunday evening despatch were avoided, surely there would be much less labour on God's day.

Let us cultivate more care and thoughtfulness for the "bearers of (postal) burdens on the Sabbath Day," who would gladly reap more benefit from the unspeakably precious gift of God's Day of Rest.—Yours faithfully, MERCY.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

PROFESSOR GWATKIN preached in the University Church last Sunday. Mr. Pilkington, of Uganda, gave an address at the daily prayer meetings, and also addressed a few men in Dr. Moule's drawing-room in the evening.

Dr. Moule preached a special sermon on behalf of the Church of England Young Men's Society, in Holy Trinity Church. This Society has been founded upwards of fifty years, and is doing an admirable work in uniting Christian young men together for progressive Christian work.

On Thursday evening the terminal meeting of the Jesus Lane Sunday-school teachers was held in the Vicarage of St. Andrew's the Less. A goodly number were present, a helpful address being given by Rev. A. M. Knight, of Cains.

Bishop Selwyn has been appointed lecturer in Pastoral Theology for this year. The subject is, "Preparation for Holy Orders in the light of the duty of England to her Colonies and the Heathen."

On Tuesday evening, in the Alexandra Hall, Dr. Sarah Anderson Brown gave a lecture to a very large audience, on Lady Henry Somerset's Village Inebriate Homes.

God has abundantly blessed the work of the Cambridge Intercollegiate Christian Union this term. There are now over 250 members, fully 150 being recruits this term.

MR. MONTAGU BEAUCHAMP.

I AM returning to China with my wife and child, and intend sailing from Southampton (D.V.) Jan. 5. Farewell meetings have been arranged for Dec. 28 and 31 at Mildmay, 3 p.m.

I have just returned from Hâvre, where I stayed with my mother at the Sailors' Rest. The work there is increasing in interest. In addition to the work among English sailors, I was much interested one evening speaking at the Breton Mission. This is carried on at five different halls in the town and district. They are maintained in faith, and there is no mistaking the spirit and power in which the work is conducted, under the leadership of M. de Quéré. They are in need of larger rooms. Many have been won from the lowest depths of sin, and some converts are doing mission work among their own people. They also show an interest in foreign missions, having given at different times about 10 francs to the C.M.S., mostly in coppers.

Should any feel inclined to help in this simple evangelistic work, contributions may be sent through Lady Beauchamp, at the Sailors' Rest, Hâvre, France, for M. de Quéré.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—That blessing may rest on Mr. J. J. Browne's anniversary meeting on 19th inst. at Y.M.C.A., Camden Town, for the L.C.M. work among publicans and their families.—That much blessing may attend Mr. William Nobbs' services at the Mission Hall, Dowlais, during December.—For blessing on services at Pontnewydd Mission Hall, during Mr. James Jones's Mission, December 14 to 23.—That a good work begun at Woodham Walter, Essex, may be extended, and have increased blessing from God.—For meetings being held by Mr. Brealey this week at Devizes. PRAISE.—For great blessing attending a mission by Mrs. Pleasance at Shaftesbury Hall, Gossett-street, E.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Hackney Y.M.C.A. is arranging an excursion to Paris for Easter week, 1896.

Mr. F. L. Porter, secretary of the Hackney Y.M.C.A., has been appointed travelling secretary for the North-East Metropolitan district, which includes some sixteen associations, and comprises parts of Middlesex, Essex, and Hertfordshire.

Rev. James Baillie, at a Young Men's Reception of the Finsbury Park Association, on November 26, gave a magnificent address, which will long dwell in the memory, and its earnest power will be felt in many lives. The new men (eleven in all) had a hearty reception from their fellow members.

The annual meetings of the Y.M.C.A., Shrewsbury, were held on Thursday week; there was an afternoon meeting, followed by a tea, in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, and an evening meeting in the Working Men's Hall. The meetings were very successful, and the report presented showed a year of steady progress in the work of the Association.

The evangelistic services for men, conducted at Exeter Hall by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, on Thursday evenings, continue to attract large and appreciative audiences week by week. During the past month Mr. Macgregor has spoken on the following subjects: "Sin," "Compromise," "Decision." On Thursday Mr. Macgregor speaks on "Deliverance."

At the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Omagh, a prayer-meeting was held each day during the week of prayer. The meetings were arranged for an hour at which they would not clash with other religious meetings in town, and were well attended throughout. We have no doubt but that the earnest prayers offered up on behalf of Y.M.C.A. work will be answered by our Heavenly Father in his own time and way.

Association News, telling of the blessing accruing from the recent mission, gives the following incident: "During Mr. Lane's mission at Exeter Hall, a young man, aged nineteen years, employed in a large business house in the West End of London, was converted. In conversation afterwards he was encouraged to approach his employer with a view to gaining permission to establish a Bible class in the house. Permission was readily granted, and at the first meeting twenty were present, the second meeting found thirty present, while the number rose to fifty at the third gathering." This needs no comment.

The half-yearly meetings of the National Council were held at Exeter Hall on Friday, and brought together a large and representative body of friends of the work from all parts of the country. The reports of the travelling secretaries were distinctly encouraging. An invitation was presented on behalf of the Dublin Association for the British Conference (which will assemble next year in Derby, and possibly in 1897 at Glasgow, the International Convention following in 1898) to meet in that city in 1899, to join in commemorating the jubilee of the oldest Irish Association. The Y.M.C.A. Bible Reading Union, it was reported, has now fifty separate branches, with a membership of 2,500.

THE Y.W.C.A.

WORKERS FOR INDIA.

Some weeks ago this sentence appeared in our columns: "The call from Bombay Y.W.C.A. has not been responded to." About that time, at a small prayer meeting of only three, held in one of the Y.W. Institutes in India, the prayer went up that God would send forth ten more Y.W.C.A. workers to India. Now we are rejoicing in the offer of the first of the further ten. But Bombay is not alone in calling to workers at home, with sufficient income (£200) to come and live in India. From small branches all over the country the same need is expressed. We quote from a letter: "There is no one to take the meetings; at one place near Benares, a large town full of English-speaking people, has no mission work beyond a monthly visit from a missionary. I have heard of a house. Could not some home branches guarantee the salary of a worker? The Y.W.C.A. work is urgent, and unless they undertake it at once the loss to themselves and India will be great. My heart is sad to see the readiness of the heathen to hear the Gospel, and the few who can take it to them."

BRIEF NOTES.

In accordance with a resolution passed at a recent meeting, the United Central Council will in future be designated the British National Council. Major Lombard is secretary.

The annual reunion of the Bessbrook Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. was held in the Town Hall on the 29th ult. There was a large attendance. The number of Y.W.C.A. members is 200, and 40 new members have joined.

A social was held in the Lecture-hall, Fakenham, on the 29th ult., when Miss Blanche Pigott gave an address.

The first of a series of tea meetings has been held at the Arbroath branch. Mrs. Small, president, gave a short address.

A novel and enjoyable entertainment was provided for the members of the Longforgan branch in the form of a chrysanthemum show, held at Castle Huntly. It is an annual affair, and is much appreciated.

A successful sale of work was held at Morley Halls on December 3 and 4 for the benefit of the Institute, the C.M.S. and Zenana Bible and Medical Missions. In the much regretted absence of Lady Portman through illness, Sir George Williams presided at the opening ceremony. The Y.W.C.A. stalls were provided by the members. The stalls were cleared, and the substantial sum of £80 19s. 7d. realised for the Institute, besides £40 1s. 10d. for the C.M.S. and £18 for the Z.B.M.M.

The Central Institute Monthly Record gives the following statistics. The membership numbers nearly 1000, 277 being Prayer Union members, 663 associates, and forty-eight hon. associates; 368 joined during the year, and 410 are total abstainers. The average attendance at the Bible-classes on Sunday is 100, and on Thursday seventy; at special mission services on Wednesdays 140; at the prayer meetings from ten to forty, and at social evenings 200. The approximate attendances at the various classes during the year was 16,837. Miss Willmot, the Resident Superintendent, will gladly welcome any desiring to join.

On Friday evening, Nov. 29, the members of the Park Mission Bible-classes, numbering about eighty, were entertained at Morley Hall at a tea given by Mrs. Quinn, of 115, Mount-street. After the tea Miss Morley exhibited her beautiful dissolving views on the Holy Land, accompanied by an explanation of each picture, its place in God's Word, and the spiritual application as contained in the Gospels. This was followed up by Rev. J. Harper, curate of All Souls, Langham-place, in an earnest address and prayer. The Park Mission was founded by Miss Hay Chapman; she is at present assisted by Mrs. John Chapman, of Suffolk House, Harrow, by whom contributions in aid of the Park Mission work, and articles of clothing will be gratefully received.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

At the annual meeting of the C.E. Society, The Green, Ossett, Rev. W. Cousins occupied the chair. Miss Emma Wilby submitted an encouraging report of good work.

The fourth anniversary of the C.E. Society at John Street Chapel, Edgware-road, has just been held. An encouraging report was given. Addresses were given by Rev. J. Tucker and Mr. H. R. Parker. The pastor, W. T. Russell, conducted a consecration service, when nine societies took part. The power of the Holy Spirit was felt.

The first conference in connection with the West Cliff Tabernacle Society, Bournemouth, was held on Wednesday week. The president, Pastor G. Wainwright, presided at the meetings, and addresses were given by Rev. Benj. J. Gibbon, of Southampton, Rev. T. L. Johnson, late of the Cameroons, and by local friends. Ten societies were represented, and the conference was throughout of a very interesting and inspiring nature. The Endeavour movement is spreading, and proving a great blessing to the young people of this district.

MISS M. MCLEAN, who has recently vacated the rooms occupied by her at Eccleston Conference Hall, S. W., desires us to remove an erroneous impression, which has in some way become current, that she has had charge of the work connected with the Hall. Though residing there, her work has chiefly lain outside.

ARMENIAN ORPHANAGE, BROUSSA.—For more than twenty years it has carried on its labour of love, but just now it is in great straits consequent upon the recent atrocities, the native Evangelical Churches being utterly unable to send their usual contributions towards its support. Pastor Baghdasarian writes me: "We need wood, coals, clothing, blankets (100), shoes, articles of winter, food, etc. The blankets are quite worn out, and give no protection in our icy cold winter. I have done my utmost to get help fron this country, but they can give not a penny more. All the country is now engaged in collecting for the victims of the atrocities." Gifts for these little ones would be gratefully received by the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, office, Alliance House, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

W. A. Essery, Hon. Sec.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Mrs. Baeyertz is holding a Gospel mission at Airdrie, with large congregations.

The Evangelistic Institute, Rutherglen, has recently been enlarged, and was reopened last week.

The Sabbath morning free breakfast movement in Perth is proving a channel of help and blessing to many.

The Free Church College, Edinburgh, has about forty students this session not connected with that church.

Professor Charteris, of Edinburgh, has made a strong pronouncement on the evils of raffling at Church bazaars.

Dr. John Hunter, of Trinity Congregational Church, Glasgow, has commenced a short daily service in his church.

Rev. A. Connell, of Regent Square Church, is to receive a call to Free St. Columba's congregation, Edinburgh. He was formerly an assistant pastor.

A temperance auxiliary has been formed in connection with the eastern section of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. for aggressive action on the licensing question.

At the annual meeting in Edinburgh of the Scottish branch of the B.W.T.A., a resolution was passed that Scotland is ripe for the application of the Local Veto.

The death of Rev. W. Selbie, of Maryculter Free Church is reported. He had attained the age of seventy-two, and had ministered for over forty years to the same congregation.

The Christian Endeavour Societies and Y.M.C.A. at Uddingston are meeting with much encouragement in their united weekly meetings. Many bright testimonies are now to be heard.

The Salvation Army have opened their winter work at Dumbarton. Their own hall having proved too small for the numbers who attended the meetings, they have taken a lease of the lesser burgh hall.

The workers of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association held last week a series of Pilgrim's Progress evangelistic meetings for young people in the Free Church at Bothwell. Eighty or a hundred lads and girls were dealt with in the inquiry meeting each evening.

Sir D. C. R. Carrick Buchanan presided over the monthly conference of the Lanarkshire Christian Union at Whifflet, when Rev. J. E. Houston, Cambuslang, opened the subject, "The Fruits of the Spirit." Mr. Geddes, of the South Morocco Mission, gave an account of his work there.

IRISH NOTES.

A conference for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in Newry under the auspices of the Newry Presbytery.

A three days' series of meetings for the promotion of holiness was held last week in Stephen's Green Church, Dublin, and was largely attended.

Much regret is felt in the South of Ireland at the death of Rev. Canon Fry, rector of Corbally, who had spent fifty-four years in the ministry. He was an earnest Evangelical and greatly respected.

The street preachers on making their appearance in Sligo on Sunday met with a hostile reception from a crowd of Roman Catholics. As, however, the preachers were protected by a strong force of constabulary, they escaped uninjured, and retired to their quarters. The town is in an excited state, crowds following a band formed for the purpose of preventing the evangelists obtaining a hearing.

AMERICAN NOTES.

Dr. Lorimer, of Tremont Temple, Boston, has declined the call to Chicago.

Large crowds have been attending the meetings held by Mr. Moody, in Atlanta, Ga. The tabernacle accommodates about 6000 people.

A convention of the International Christian Workers' Association has been held at New Haven, Conn., marked by deep religious interest.

A monster petition, prepared in Chicago, has been presented to the American Board of Education, asking that the reading of the Bible be restored in the public schools.

A religious revival of remarkable power, says The New York Independent, is sweeping through Colorado College. It is the outgrowth of the earnest spirit that has pervaded the institution for a long time, and the large society hall is crowded at the daily service which is held there. The whole college is profoundly stirred, and the influence of the movement is very far-reaching. The number of students has been almost doubled this year, and the whole Rocky Mountain section of the country is feeling the influence of the college in a great variety of ways.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The annual volumes of The Young Man (5s.) and The Home Messenger (2s.) make most excellent storehouses of good reading. They are ably edited and very attractively got up, as well as solidly useful. (Horace Marshall & Son.)

Friendly Greetings (5s.) is a handsomely-bound volume of illustrated readings. Other annuals (all 1s. 6d. each) are: The Cottager and Artisan, gay outside and in, as well as full of good matter; Light in the Home, a worthy successor of the old-time "Tract Magazine"; The Child's Companion, a bright book for boys and girls; and Our Little Dots, "the very thing" for nursery folk. (Religious Tract Society.)

The Guide is an excellent monthly magazine for young men. The year's parts make a volume rich in information and thought stimulus. The portraits and sketches deal with Christians well known in many walks of life. Professor Ferguson, D.D., writes on "Men I Have Heard," and Rev. P. A. Gordon-Clark on the "Culture of the Christ-like Life." Other series relate to "Great Words of the Bible" and "Watchwords of Life." (2s. W. Love, 219A, Argyle-street, Glasgow.)

China's Millions. Vol. for 1895. This handsomely bound volume contains much that is of vital concern to all interested in missions. China is, of course, specially represented, and all parts of this great empire find illustration from the facile pen and skilled pencil of men and women who know China and its peoples, and are in deepest sympathy with its vast needs. Recent events and present anxiety lend additional interest to this missionary annual. (Morgan & Scott. 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.)

The British Messenger is a monthly high both in aim and attainment. The annual volume (1s. 6d.) has a serial story by Laura A. Barter, entitled "Mona's Inheritance." The general contents will prove of service to evangelists, as well as helpful in the home circle. The Gospel Trumpet (1s.) is full of narratives enforcing evangelical truth. It deserves many readers. The monthly parts of Good News (4d.), stitched together, provide excellent reading. District visitors and mission workers should find these pages of service. All three publications are attractively illustrated. (Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

STORY BOOKS.

Beating the Record: A Story of the Life and Times of George Stephenson, by G. Stebbing, is a splendid book for boys. The picture of last century life is worth reading, and the industry of Stephenson should stimulate young readers to make the most of their opportunities. (5s. Shaw.)

Nadya; A Tale of the Steppes, by Oliver M. Norris (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society), is at once tragic and pathetic in its delineation of Stundist sufferings. A preface gives some particulars of these Russian dissenters, who are so relentlessly persecuted by Church and State officials. The story is both entertaining and instructive.

A capital story of seafaring adventure is Rogues' Island, by W. C. Metcalfe. (5s. Shaw & Co.). The author is a master hand at this kind of narrative. A Soldier's Son, by E. Everett Green (2s. 6d. Shaw & Co.), is a delightful tale, setting forth some battles fought by a schoolboy, and how he won them. We should like to see a "Coals of Fire" regiment formed in every school. The Gold that Glitters, by the late Emily S. Holt (1s. 6d. Shaw & Co.), not only gives a vivid glimpse into the troublous times of the English Commonwealth, but carries an ever-needed message to girls who are tempted to despise solid worth and be fascinated by appearances. Elbert's Return, by Dr. Daniel Wise (1s. 6 d. C. H. Kelly), is a lively American story which may be commended to all discontented boys; other young people may also read it with pleasure and profit. The Bank Clerk's Secret, and other tales (1s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.). The stories are unexceptionable, but the illustrations are scarcely up to date.

A NEW BOOK ON MISSIONS.

From Far Formosa. By George Leslie Mackay, D.D. (7s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) The author of this fine volume has laboured twenty-three years as a missionary in the island of Formosa in connection with the Canadian Presbyterian Church, so that he writes with all the authority of intimate knowledge, and of long experience. The book is no mere narrative of Gospel work among the heathen; it is all that and much more. While devoting himself heart and soul to his Master's service, Dr. Mackay has also been a close observant student of Formosan life, whether among the Chinese, the Malayan races, or the unsubdued aborigines. The chapters describing the geography, geology, botany, ethnology, and other aspects of the natural history of this interesting island, are full of valuable information. But the great theme of the book is the progress of the Christianising work effected by the author and his fellow-missionaries. Many are the triumphs of the Gospel recorded. The editor of the book deserves the heartiest thanks for his share in the production of a work of extreme interest. Portraits, maps, etc., enhance the attractions of the volume.

Living Words.—Under this title the addresses delivered by Revs. Andrew Murray, C. G. Moore, J. G. Mantle, and others, at the Rothesay Convention, have been published. (Christian Literature Co., Edinburgh. (6d. and 1s.)

The Sunday School Teacher. (2d. S. S. Union.) This helpful monthly comes out with the New Year under a new editor (Rev. A. Smellie, of Stranraer), enlarged and thoroughly remodelled. The first number, now before us, is a distinct improvement; and Sunday-school teachers to whom we have shown it welcome heartily the new features.

Family Prayers for Thirteen Weeks. By J. R. Miller, D.D. (T. Nelson & Sons.) This volume is preferable to most of its kind. Some who neither desire nor need to use prayers composed by others, may read these pages to spiritual profit. Dr. Miller hopes this book may help some to set up family altars in their homes; and if it should do so, it will have justified its publication. At the close are a few prayers for special occasions.

Christ and the Comforter. By Rev. F. S. Webster (2s. Marshall Brothers). This little book is a fresh contribution to the most important of themes. The author's style is eminently clear, while his train of argument is in most cases cogent and convincing. The chapter on "Christ and his Sacraments" is one of exceptional value in these days when so many seem to be returning to mediæval superstitions. The paragraph, however, on baptism, we must regard as highly unsatisfactory, and indeed self-contradictory.

Homiletic Expositions of St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians is a goodly volume by Thomas Davies, M.A., Ph.D. A second part gives twenty-four sermons on great texts, and a series of leading thoughts (or outlines) on passages of Scripture. (R. D. Dickinson). The expositions on the Epistle to the Philippians number no fewer than forty-five, so that in point of quantity the volume deserves notice. There is quality also, and hard-worked preachers will find in these pages many a point and illustration likely to prove of service to them.

Founders' Week Convention. (2s. 6d. London Missionary Society, Blomfield-street.) It is but a few weeks since we were in the midst of these remarkable and inspiring meetings. Already we have before us the official report of the papers and speeches, reviewing the results of the first century of missions, the present position of missionary effort in the South Seas, Africa, India, China, and other lands, and dealing comprehensively with women's work, medical missions, native workers, and missionary policy. The volume will be valued as a worthy memorial of historic gatherings.

Cosy Corner Stories, (5s.) is the title of a very attractive volume for the young. The illustrations, whether coloured or monotint, are all excellent. There will be joy in the nursery when this book is introduced. Another interesting publication, highly artistic in finish, is Baby Life: A Remembrance of Baby Days (2s. 6d.). There are spaces for recording notable events and red-letter days in baby-life. Striking nursery books are: The Children's Express (with railway scenes); The Holiday Coach; Our Dickey Birds, and Pets and Playmates, (1s. each). (Ernest Nister, 24, St. Bride-street, E.C.)

Modern Science in Bible Lands, one of the many useful volumes for which we are indebted to the learning and industry of Sir J. William Dawson, is now in its third edition. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) No book of its character is more suggestive than this, which contains the observations of a geologist of world-wide fame on points of Scripture history and geography. Reverential in tone and fully illustrated, this is a work which should not be overlooked by those who would investigate the problems that have gathered round the early books of the Bible. A new preface outlines some of the latest results of scientific research.

Temptation and Toil. By Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken. (3s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) These "sermons on the battle and the work of life," by the well-known mission preacher, deserve a careful perusal and study. The first series of addresses, on the subject of temptation, appear to us to be a thoughtful, reverent and well-balanced contribution to the elucidation of a theme that is not free from difficulty. In one or two places, Mr. Aitken seems to show excessive tenderness towards the performances of the "Higher Critics," but he is clear as to the supreme and unassailable position of God's revealed truth. The discourses on "Toil" are most stimulating and practical, as the author's utterances invariably are.

A Manual of Modern Church History. By W. F. Slater. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) This is a very compact and compendious handbook of the chief religious movements of the past two centuries. It indicates wide research. While giving an impartial estimate of the flow and ebb of religious thought, the compiler does not conceal his own predilections in favour of evangelical as opposed to sacerdotal teaching. Here and there inaccuracies on questions of fact may be discovered, as when Mr. Slater represents the present working staff of the China Inland Mission to be 160 instead of 620 or more. Altogether the little work gives a careful bird's-eye view of the subject, and it will be extremely useful to the average student.

A welcome addition to our Missionary Library is made in Great Missionaries. By Revs. C. C. Creegan, D.D., and J. A. B. Goodnow. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Dr. F. E. Clark, of the Christian Endeavour Movement, very warmly commends this book to young people. Certainly missionary biography, as here told, is neither dull, flat, nor stale (nor is it, in fact, in many recent missionary biographies). The lives of such heroes as Dr. Livingstone, Mackay of Uganda, Bishop Patteson, Dr. Griffith John, Dr. Kenneth Mackenzie, Dr. Moffatt, Dr. Paton, and others of a like type could not fail in able hands to make a live book. In this instance the authors have certainly used their material well.

Ten Years After. By Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon. (3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) Into this truly delightful book Mrs. Spurgeon has gathered the printed records of her second decade of service in connection with her "Book Fund." The sum total of the good that she has been able to accomplish through the "Book Fund" in itself constitutes a noble life-work; when, added to that, we consider the inspiration and good cheer conveyed to thousands of readers through these charming annual reports, we can but thank God for such priceless gifts to the treasury of his Church universal. All who read this volume—may they be many—will pray that the author may be spared to give to the world a third volume as richly laden with good things as the two already issued.

Deaf and Dumb Signs: The address of the author is, 46, Penge-road, S.E., not 49, as stated last week.

Our King's Command—"Go Ye," by the late Mr. Spurgeon (Partridge) is one penny, and not twopence, as stated in our last issue.

Nye's Illustrated Church Annual. (1s. Bemrose.) A full compendium of information on Church matters and points in Church defence.

Faithful unto Death. (Marshall Brothers. 1d.) A touching story of the Elliott Home, Dublin, being that of Lena Yellop, murdered at Ku-cheng.

The Religious Tract Society has issued:—Christmas Carols, hymns for Christmastide, with music arranged for four voices. By Josiah Booth and others. Fourth Series. (1d.)

New Year's Prayer, by A. T. B., is a booklet presenting some of the lessons derivable from 1 Chron. iv. 10. The pages are spiritual and stimulating. (1d. James Magill, Corn Market, Belfast.)

The Three "R's," by Rev. George Everard, M.A., is a New Year's address, giving the marks of a true disciple. (1s. per dozen. Partridge.) A strong statement of the truth as to ruin, redemption, and regeneration.

Rev. William John Patton.—An address to young people on the life and labours of this devoted minister of Christ, earnest evangelist, and able writer, has been penned by Rev. J. M'Ilveen. (1d. Sabbath School Society, Belfast).

Mr. Ernest Nister, 24, St. Bride-street, E.C., has issued some handsome calendars—coloured and illuminated. Among them are "Children of the Year" (3s. 6d.); "He Careth for You" (1s.); "The Circling Year" (1s.); and "My Times are in Thy Hand" (1s.). Each of these has a separate sheet for every month. Another fine-art calendar is in the form of a fan. The hymns, "Sun of my soul" and "As with gladness men of old" (1s. each) have been beautifully printed in booklet form, interleaved with floral and other designs.

Some useful publications of the Religious Tract Society are:—The R.T.S. Pocket-Book, with a text for every day in the year, containing an almanack, a page of cash account for each week, and a variety of commercial and social information. (1s. 6d. and 2s.) The Pocket-Book Almanack, interleaved with ruled paper. (2d.) The Tract Society's Penny Almanack, a neat book, with cover. The People's Almanack, with information specially useful in the homes of working people, daily texts, domestic hints, etc. (1d.) The Illustrated Sheet Almanack, a useful wall decoration. (1d.)

Mary Gorges writes poems expressive of spiritual aspirations and plaints; and these reach many a Christian home on cards and in booklets. This year, among other publications, Mrs. Gorges has brought out a New Year's card, embossed, and bearing verses entitled Mizpah. (2d.) The words are beautiful, the initial thought coming from Gen. xxxi. 49. Another folded card "with best wishes," has a poem entitled, "As Thy Days so shall Thy Strength be." (2d.) "The Hem of His Garment" (3d. per doz.) is an envelope tract of four pages, tinted paper. (Partridge, London; Caswell, Birmingham.)

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Excellent gatherings in connection with the Women's Total Abstinence Union have been held at Falmouth, Helston, Romsey, and Halstead.

Lady Henry Somerset, on Friday last, gave an address on the National British Women's Temperance Association in the Raikes Memorial Hall, Gloucester.

The Queen's Bench Division granted rules for writ of certiorari in two cases in which the question was the right of persons to sit as licensing justices who have an interest in the licence applied for.

Temperance Sunday will be observed on Jan. 26, in the churches of Liverpool. Bishop Ryle, in a letter to his clergy expresses an earnest hope that they will allow the claims of temperance to be advocated in their pulpits that day.

In a case tried last week in Manchester as to misrepresentations in connection with the sale of a public-house, Sergeant Cubberley, of the Manchester police, said the business of the house was a falling one; "in fact, the public-house business in Manchester was generally a falling one." Though he had visited the house on more than one occasion, he had never seen a single customer in it.

Some generous temperance friends have, by contributions of from £100 each, created a prize fund to be expended in sending silver and gold medals (quite free) to any adult or junior temperance, religious, or social organisation, to award to their best reciter, singer, speaker or essayist, in a local competition which they may get up. Particulars from the "United Temperance Conference Prize Committee," 19, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

Not only in the United Kingdom, but also in the United States, there has been a marked decrease in the consumption of intoxicating drinks during the past year. The revenue on the sales of spirits in the latter for the year ending June 30, 1895, as reported by the Internal Revenue Commissioners, has decreased 5,396,624·84dol.; and those derivable from beer, and other fermented drinks, have also decreased 5,170,795·34dol.—much in the same proportion. In 1894 the receipts were 85,259,252·25dol., while in 1895 they had decreased to 79,862,627·41dol.

The Army Temperance Association report a steady increase of branches and members. The number of branches is 194, and returns received from 120 of these give 7,389 enrolled members. In many of the reports received commanding officers speak strongly of the value of the work done, especially among young soldiers. The Army Reservists' House in London is now generally three parts full. It has enabled many men to have a decent home in London while they were looking for work, and has also been used by non-commissioned officers and men on furlough.

Canon Hicks, preaching the annual sermon of the C.E.T.S. in Salford, dwelt on the unhappy state of the place from a temperance point of view. Dealing with remedies, he said that "self-denial was wanted, if they were to save husbands, wives, children, and neighbours from this awful vice. They must also go in for legislation—for laws had a wonderful effect upon the condition of society. The laws should be altered so as to render it easier to do right and more difficult to do wrong. The time was ripe for complete Sunday closing, and for a considerable restriction of the hours during which licensed places were open."

Archdeacon Wilson declares that the immediate aim of the Church of England Temperance Society is to press on Parliament and the Government the claim of local communities to exercise a choice among several alternative proposals drawn up on lines to be approved by Parliament, by which they will control the sale of liquor within their own areas. It is an abandonment of the attempt to force one reform on all communities; it is the recognition that temperance legislation must be tentative and experimental; it is, however, a strong assertion of the principle that Parliament, and not local communities, must formulate the various lines of reform and determine what notice or what equitable compensation is due to vested interests. It is an attempt to raise the question above party politics.

At a special Temperance Conference at Manchester, summoned by the Manchester and Salford Temperance Union and other organisations in the district, Mr. W. E. A. Axon read a paper on "The Facts of the Temperance Reformation, and how to disseminate them." Nothwithstanding the temporary check at the recent general election, there were few who did not feel, after studying the subject, that further legislation was inevitable, and that it would be in the direction of popular control. Such a law would only be possible, and could only be effective, so far as it was supported by public opinion. The immediate duty of the temperance party was the creation of such a body of opinion. Before the Maine Law was passed, Neal Dow and his colleagues had it was said, flooded the States knee-deep with temperance literature.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Thomas Evans (lately arrived from India) desires us to note that his present address is Ingleside, Maindee, Newport (Mon).

Mrs. Hilton, of the Stepney Crèche, has again been laid low in sickness, we regret to say. According to our latest information, she was making good progress towards recovery.

Mr. R. C. Morgan sailed from Southampton for Cape Town, on Saturday, by the Union s.s. Moor. He proposes to spend three or four months in visiting mission stations in South Africa.

Rev. John M'Neill has acccepted an invitation from the Sheffield Young Men's Christian Association to conduct a mission in that city extending from February 2 to the 16th. The Albert Hall has been secured for the meetings, of which there will be two daily.

Rev. T. L. Cuyler, in a recent letter, says: "I go to-morrow to preach to the medical students of Philadelphia, in the Walnut-street Theatre. To-night I address a convention of the Y.M.C.A. Never better in health, never busier or happier. Yours for a long, steady pull."

Dr. Robert Kerr has returned to Rabat, Morocco, where the cholera has broken out. Mr. Grahame Wilson, 13, Royal-terrace, Crosshill, Glasgow, is willing to give (within reasonable distance) lime-light lectures on Dark Morocco. Mr. E. J. Mitchell, Grove-street Institute, Glasgow, will be pleased to receive and forward contributions for the mission.

Rev. James Neil met last week with an accident. While hanging up one of his pictures (in preparation for a lecture) he slipped, and falling, struck his face, cutting his cheek open and injuring himself severely. He is now lying at the house of Mr. S. L. Greaves, 4, Clifton-place, Hyde Park, W., for whom he was about to lecture in an institution in which Mr. Greaves is interested. Many will pray for Mr. Neil's speedy recovery.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Newport (Mon.).—Rev. J. Manton Smith closed on Sunday evening a special mission in Stow Hill Baptist Chapel. Great interest has been awakened, and, it is believed, real work done.

Cambuslang.—Mr. William Thomson, jun., is conducting three weeks' evangelistic services here. Bible-readings are being held in the afternoons, and Gospel meetings (the addresses illustrated by lime-light) in the evenings. Many have already come forward to testify to blessing received.

Southsea.—Mr. Gerald Coultas, of Barry, Cardiff, has completed twenty-eight days' mission at the King-street Hall, Southsea, with very satisfactory results. Many of the Lord's people have been blessed, backsliders have been restored, sinners converted, and hearts made to praise the Lord. J. Denning.

Frockheim, N.B.—Mr. J. W. Moodie is conducting an evangelistic mission in the Free Church. During the first week the meetings were not large, but when the second began, a deep impression was evident by the numbers who turned out to hear the addresses illustrated by the military experiences of the speaker.

Ireland.—Evangelistic services have been held in Donegal-street Congregational Church, Belfast, by Rev. John Robertson, of Glasgow. Similar services have been held in Munninane Methodist Church, by Rev. H. McKeay and T. W. Davidson, of Sligo; and in Kingsland Park Methodist Church, Dublin, by Mr. Jas. Dixon, of the Belfast Central Mission.

Ecclefechan, N.B.—Mr. Robert Snaith, evangelist, Newcastle, has been conducting special meetings in the Free Church Hall, Ecclefechan, for the past month. The power of God has been manifest at every meeting, and many have received blessing. The gift of song which Mr. Snaith possesses added greatly to the interest of the meetings.

David Tweedie.

Roggiett, Mon.—This much-neglected place has been visited by Pastor Owen Tidman, of Magor. There being no available building, various meetings have been conducted in the cottages, which have been well attended. Believers have been refreshed, and the children have been instructed and blessed. If the Lord will an iron room will be erected, and it is believed that such evangelistic addresses will be blessed to the entire neighbourhood. G. D. J.

Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E.—Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver have concluded a month's mission here, and there is every reason for believing that much good has resulted from their labours. The most noticeable feature has been the number of backsliders who have been restored. In addition to the work at "The Castle," the brothers have rendered excellent service among the boys and girls of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and have assisted at the smaller mission halls connected with the Edinburgh Castle. S. E. B.

Rochester.—A nine days' mission has been conducted at the Baptist Church here, by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch and Mr. Monro Collings, from November 23 till December 1. The Bible expositions by Mr. Gooch were deeply appreciated by all, and the messages delivered by Mr. Collings were with power and blessing to many. We bless God for the word of both his servants, and are confident that much blessing will result. G. Anderson Miller, Pastor.

Birmingham.—A mission to young men in Birmingham was conducted in connection with the Y.M.C.A., November 24 to December 1, by Mr. Thomas A. Bailey. Following as it did almost immediately upon the week of prayer, much blessing was anticipated, and in this the workers were not disappointed. Night after night the Gospel was proclaimed to good numbers of young men, and at the after meetings the workers were busily occupied with enquirers. On the two Sundays Mr. Bailey addressed the large P.S.A. of 700 to 800 men, and in the evening the mixed evangelistic meeting in the Association Hall. At a special meeting held on December 3, a number gave testimony of having been led from darkness to light, through the meetings, and others spoke of the blessing which they had received. In one house of business three young men have been led to the Saviour, and in another four, and the earnestness displayed by them to induce their fellows to come to the meetings and accept Christ, was very marked.

Henry Whitwell.

OBITUARY.

MR. JOHN GIFFORD.

A prominent and highly-respected citizen of Edinburgh has been removed by the death of Mr. John Gifford, a well-known bank official. For many years he had been very active in Sunday-school work, and was a leading helper at the Carrubbers Close Mission. We hope to give portrait and sketch of the deceased in a succeeding issue.

MR. EDWARD COCKERELL.

A well-known figure has passed away from Liverpool in Mr. Cockerell, who for the past twenty-five years has filled the post of organist at Byrom Hall church, in one of the most squalid parts of Liverpool. He lost his sight when a boy, and entered the school for the blind, where his talent for music was discovered and improved. He was an earnest Christian, and in the summer months he would take his little harmonium and his Bible with raised type to New Brighton, and gather crowds upon the sands to listen to the hymns he sang with a rich full tenor voice.

DR. S. F. SMITH.

The death is announced of Rev. Samuel Francis Smith, D.D., of Newton Centre, Massachusetts, a Christian poet of world-wide fame. Though most generally known as author of the American patriotic song "My country, 'tis of thee," Dr. Smith's name will long be revered by many as the author of the following and other hymns:—"To-day the Saviour calls," "When the harvest is past," "The morning light is breaking," "Onward speed thy conquering flight," "Down to the sacred wave," and "Beyond where Cedron's waters flow." Dr. Smith was a minister of the Baptist denomination, to the literature of which he made many contributions. Death was sudden, at the ripe age of 87.

A DANISH MISSIONARY COUNTESS.

Dear Sir,—Your readers will probably remember the appearance of the portrait of Countess Schimmelmann in your columns in connection with a sketch from my pen of the heartless cruelty she had experienced owing to her devoted missionary efforts among the poor fishermen. It may be remembered that she was a favourite with the Empress Frederic Wilhelm of Germany, but was afterwards incarcerated in a lunatic asylum until it was discovered that she had all the while been perfectly sane. She has arrived at Great Yarmouth in her yacht Duen. She speaks excellent English, and desires to address meetings in behalf of her mission work in Germany. I doubt not that the editor will receive and forward letters from friends wishing to arrange a visit from her.—Yours truly,

Birmingham. Joseph Malins.

BOARD SCHOOL CHILDREN.—We gave last year from our Free Dinner Fund 170,000 free meals. The whole of our work is now re-organised, but we are therefore greatly in need of funds to sustain it. We give free meals only to the children of widows, of parents ill or out of work, or especially delicate children. How great a boon the meals proved to many of these poor children during the distress of last winter, the pages of our new report bear testimony. There are many children attending the London Board Schools in poor localities at the present moment who are in sore need daily of a good hot meal. Anna Pennington.

CONSUMPTION,

INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

104th INTERVIEW.

With Mrs. WHYTE, Wesley Cottages, Dalkeith.

REMARKABLE CASE OF DISEASE OF THE RIGHT LUNG.

Not published before.

In a letter from Mr. Whyte, he says: "I have long delayed giving my testimony to the good my wife has received through your treatment. My reason for so doing was to see whether it would be permanent. . . . For four years she has been able to do all the housework for our family, and at the present time is in fair health.

I called recently at Mr. Whyte's house in Dalkeith, and found Mrs. Whyte strong and well, and busily engaged in housewifely duties. From her I obtained the following particulars of her illness and recovery:—

"When my husband first wrote to Mr. Congreve in May, 1888," she said, "I was very ill. For some time previously, I had had the doctor attending me two or three times a week. He said there was an abscess and afterwards a cavity in the right lung. I spit a large quantity of blood, sometimes fluid blood, and sometimes mixed with the expectoration, which was greeny-yellowish and very offensive. There was a soreness in the region of the lung, a terrible cough; I had bad night sweats. I got so very weak and thin that I was compelled to keep my bed and couldn't even sit up. There were some complications of diarrhœa and skin eruption, but, almost from the time of my commencing the medicine I progressed, and, after steadily persevering for fifteen months, I recovered my health and am now quite able to attend to all household matters. My general health is good, and this child was born after my recovery. Those who know me tell me I am a wonder. I believe I owe my life to Mr. Congreve's treatment."

In answer to a further question, Mrs. Whyte told me that she had recommended the medicine to other sufferers, and had known cases in which benefit had been received. She also gave me her permission to make public this account of her illness and cure.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. Once again Christmas is upon us, and we wish our readers Christmas peace and joy. In the contemplation of God's unspeakable Gift, we should be in the spirit of praise and prayer, which are so marvellously combined in the angels' words: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." May Advent grace and blessings be showered upon all who love the Lord Jesus in every place.

All true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ should earnestly set their minds on the practical duties of the season. These include not only a large-hearted charity, but an earnest desire to see that their gifts are well-bestowed. Personal inquiry should be resorted to wherever practical. There is an anonymous way of giving through others that robs a gift of all personal charm.

Our Lord scattered his benefits broadcast, but He took care that all who benefited by his teaching and his kindness should be brought into personal relations with Himself. So, with the gift, they received the light of his countenance, the touch of his hand, the word of his sympathy, the blessing of his Divine presence. He sought the poor as much as they sought Him. To follow Him in this should be the privilege of his people. A personal visit should be made if possible to those whom we benefit; and when that is impossible, a kind message should at least be sent with our gifts. They will then be doubly valued, and a material blessing will often become the channel of a spiritual grace.

We have been gratified to receive letters from several of our readers endorsing Captain Dawson's appreciative remarks as to the help afforded by the daily expositions on the chapters of the Bible and Prayer Union. The writer of the "Daily Homily" joins with us in thanking our friends for their kind interest.

The Conference on the Opium Traffic had two features at least which must have impressed even a casual observer—each speaker's strong grip of facts, and his fast hold of eternal principles. There was the utmost care and caution displayed in keeping severely within the limits of ascertained fact, and perhaps too tender a handling of the men who in the report of the Royal Commission have given the world such a travesty of judicial fairness.

One feature about some of the addresses deserves comment. There seemed to be unwillingness to saddle responsibility on anyone. The evil was said to be in the system, which had been inherited. But systems are motionless without living men, and every man who aids in carrying on the opium traffic or in keeping it in existence has some responsibility. We cannot apportion the responsibility or measure out the blame, but it is deadly to conscience to relieve men of the moral responsibility for their conduct.

Events at present transpiring in Eastern Europe are full of significance to students of prophecy, though all do not regard them as equally pivotal in the unfolding of the Divine programme of the world's history. In a sermon preached recently, on Rev. xvi. 12, Rev. Dr. Townsend, of Tunbridge Wells, said:—

> I am perfectly astonished at the number of prophecies relating to our Lord's Coming which have been fulfilled during our own lifetime. There are many blessings attendant upon a study of prophecy; one of these, and by no means the least, is that no student of prophecy was ever disturbed by doubts as to the Divinity and Inspiration of Scripture.

Dr. Townsend, like many other expositors, regards the decline of the Turkish power as the "drying up of the river Euphrates." He expressed the belief that when the doom of Turkey has sounded, Jerusalem will cease to be "trodden down of the Gentiles," for "the times of the Gentiles" shall have come to an end. The nearness of the Lord's return is becoming a widespread conviction among spiritually-minded Christians, and many are joining in the prayer, "Come, Lord Jesus."

On page 11 we reproduce an article from an American contemporary on the Armenian massacres, also recent intelligence from the scene of murder and rapine. There are many indications of a desperate Islamitic crusade, and there will doubtless be many martyrs of whom we shall never hear. The story of cruelty and suffering might well make us exclaim with Jeremiah: "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!" The "Scourge of God" has been doing his dread work for twelve centuries. Shall we not pray that, while nations continue to look on in perplexity, God Himself will say "Enough!"? Especially should we ask God to give grace to his people in Armenia to witness "a good confession." The urgent needs of the starving thousands should be the anxious care of Christians who find themselves in happy circumstances this Christmastide.

In Mr. Stead's character-sketch of the present Sultan published in the current issue of the Review of Reviews, there are strange revelations, and some very questionable statements. Abdul Hamid is represented as a man of many virtues, and his crimes are set forth largely as the results of hereditary Sultanic policy rather than as personal acts for which he must be held morally accountable. "He is as responsible for them as a tiger for its stripes and its carnivorous appetite"; which, being put into plain English, means that he is not responsible for them at all.

This is to confuse eternal moral distinctions, and to reduce them to mere nothings. It is acknowledged that he has been engaged for four years in maturing his plans for the perpetration of these horrors, and that "probably he feels more chagrined at the incompleteness of his work, than grieved because of the blood he has shed." The case for absolute moral responsibility could not be put more clearly. There is nothing more humiliating in the very mixed annals of modern journalism than the way some prominent newspapers — fortunately exceptions—have repressed important news and poured scorn on the agitation for the deliverance of the Armenians from their horrible position. Clearly, for the time, the public sentiment of England is less healthy than it was twenty years ago—or it would not permit this so quietly. We are passing as a nation through a period of moral lethargy. We have, however, no fear of the issue. There are already signs that the day of reckoning for the "New Journalism" as well as the "New Fiction" is coming. Out of this chaos the Spirit of God will ere long bring forth a new and nobler order in which the laws of holy living and national righteousness will be once more vindicated.

One of the clearest issues brought to light by the present revelations of Turkish atrocities is the true character of Mohammedanism. We have of late heard much about the nobility of the non-Christian religions. Because a few gems of thought and teaching have been brought to light, through the study of "Comparative Religion," the eyes of superficial readers have been blinded to the mass of corruption out of which they have been dug. A dust-heap might as well be eulogised for purity, because of discovery of a few lost diamonds buried in it. Here is a Moslem ruler, who is represented as a "converted man," because he consistently follows the religion he professes, inspires and authorises unspeakable atrocities, revels in the blood of his most peaceable and progressive subjects, and brings Europe to the brink of universal war. Surely this is enough to show the inherent corruption of that religion, and prove that it has reached its climax of degrading influence. The Empire of Turkey is falling to pieces through the attempt of the Sultan to press Mohammedanism to its logical outcome. By so doing he is sounding the death-knell both of his own power, and of the "faith" he and his people so "devoutly" hold.

Cardinal Vaughan, in the current National Review, unveils the Roman Catholic policy as regards Voluntary Schools. He is frank and thoroughgoing in his demands. Briefly, his claims are these: First, "any religious denomination" should have power to open Voluntary Schools whenever required by a quorum of parents having thirty children among them. Secondly, while the particular denominations should defray the cost of the site, the erection, and the administration of such schools, these should have a right to receive an equal proportionate share with the Board Schools, of all public moneys for educational purposes. This would practically come to a re-endowment of religion by the State in the most objectionable form. It would mean the recrudescence of the worst elements of sectarianism. It would tend to isolate the coming generation from earliest childhood in narrow denominational lines, and prepare the way for all kinds of narrowness and bigotry. It is, therefore, a policy against which all true lovers of human sympathy and evangelical truth should set their faces resolutely. The reign of Christian love and charity will never come along that crooked path.

No sooner had Sir Francis Scott stated that in the event of a punitive expedition against King Prempeh, he would require twenty officers, than applications for special service streamed into the War Office. It could not be said that England was in danger, nor had an urgent appeal been made; yet 200 were eager to go to the deadly West Coast of Africa—to "the white man's grave." A correspondent, calling attention to this fact, says:

The cause of law and order and the prestige of England required the expedition, but these considerations were not the first motive of the 200 volunteers. I believe the majority applied from the natural desire, in these days of peace and stagnation, to see active service, to obtain the probable medal, and the possible D.S. Order.

Here is a lesson for servants of Christ—a rebuke of their backwardness in entering the field, and going to the front of the battle.

So far we have not observed any outcry against sending the flower of the army, picked men from a dozen regiments, and two princes, to undertake a military campaign in a pestilential climate. No, the prestige of England is thought to require the expedition. Yet, when a few gallant servants of the King of kings fall on the mission field, there are prompt cries of protest! The correspondent whom we have already quoted, writes:—

From the world and also from the Church we hear remarks like—"What a shame thus to sacrifice lives, and to keep sending men and women to such places as China, the Niger, the Congo!" "More deaths on the West Coast Missions!" Yes, praise God for these heroes, and also for those heroes whose constitutions are slowly being undermined, and yet toil on, sometimes single-handed, surrounded by no romance, not even that martyrdom, no special correspondents and artists to telegraph home each step and deed of duty.

We echo our correspondent's closing sentence:—"There'll be a great review one day; let us all, at home and abroad, strive for the 'Distinguished Service' Order."

The Bishop of Winchester will have the sympathy and support of all Protestants in his refusal to license the Church of St. Agatha, at Portsmouth, in which Rev. F. R. Dolling carries on practices which are distinctly Papistical. This gentleman wished to celebrate mass for the dead at a third altar which he had erected for the purpose. In private, the Bishop had learned from him, that he regarded the celebration of Holy Communion for the dead as having the effect, he knows not how, of shortening the period during which the souls of the faithful are in a state of purgation. This view the Bishop regards as contrary to some of the distinctive principles of the Church of England. He objects also to celebrations without communicants. Mr. Dolling has, therefore, resigned. Whereunto these things will grow, we cannot foretell; but we are thankful for something like a stand at last.

The Church Times began last week an account of a "Month in a Mission Van." The driver was a layman and a stranger dressed in a cassock. The workers were "Catholics" from the East End of London, and were vowed for life to the habit of their order. They went out in July last into Essex on "strictly evangelical lines," their motto the glorious words "Jesus + only" inscribed on the front of the van. To that text the missionaries kept. Their hymn book was Moody and Sankey's. They preached from their van in villages, and by the road side. They held services in churches or in any places where they could get a congregation—one place was at a brewery. Their greatest hindrance was the election.

Thursday, July 18th.—Polling day. In consequence our congregations are very bad, not even "the oldest inhabitant" being able to combine the two ideas of performing one's duty as a citizen and a Christian on the same day.

Perhaps all was for the best, as beer and Christianity don't mix well, when beer has had the best of it all day. We tried to induce a few young men to attend our mission service in the evening, but were told there was beer to be had elsewhere, and therefore the Church must wait. To bed rather dispirited.

Think of men wearing sandals and priestly habit itinerating from village to village, getting the children together at one hour of the day, the women at another, and the men at another, singing Sankey's hymns accompanied by a harmonium, and then preaching—what? We do not quite know, only they love "Tell me the old, old story." The mixture is as curious as oil and water; or "Christianity and beer" on polling day!

Canon Page Roberts spoke only the truth when he said of those persons who are always telling us that they can worship God as well in the fields—specimens of what he calls "rural and pedestrian piety"—that they were more likely to be found in the company of a sporting paper than their Bibles. He touched a weak place when he said that the young men who take up open-air amusements on Sunday are helping to secularise that day, and are giving countenance to godless people. This testimony to the claims of the Sabbath was all the more powerful because given to a West-End congregation.

Our missionary societies are extricating themselves from their burdens of debt. The L.M.S. has already raised a centenary fund of more than £85,000, and hopes to make it at least £100,000. The difficulty is to obtain a regular income which grows equally with the work. The Wesleyan Society has cleared its debt, and is aiming at an addition of £20,000 a year to its income. Besides which, in this society there is a revival of the missionary spirit among the students in the colleges, many of whom are offering for work abroad. We shall presently learn also to economise our strength at home that we may have all the more for foreign service.

But when shall we see large numbers of business-men going abroad for the purpose of living as business missionaries, if we may use the term? Now the idea seems to be either that you go abroad exclusively as a missionary or as a business-man to make your living. If you are a Christian, you will, of course, live as a Christian, and try to do some good. But there is another idea, which, we think, will have to be widely acted upon, the idea of going abroad to live for the purpose of spreading the knowledge of Jesus. Then getting a living will be secondary, and saving men primary. Such a case we remember, and the young man has opened up a new trade between England and Japan. To be true to the Gospel first is the sure way to aid everything else that is right.

In his important new work on "St. Paul the Traveller and Roman Citizen," Professor W. M. Ramsay, whose recent scholarly book on "The Church in the Roman Empire before A.D. 170" created such a sensation in theological circles, announces his conviction that the Acts of the Apostles was really written by St. Luke. This opinion gains no little significance from the fact that Dr. Ramsay entered on an independent investigation of the question, with his mind unfavourably disposed to this result. It is remarkable how the best scholarship is gradually throwing over the last remnants of the Tübingen School's conclusions as to the late origin of the New Testament literature. Step by step the dates of the various documents are being pushed back, and the old "traditional" views re-established beyond the possibility of further cavil. We may live yet to find that criticism has used its destructive weapons only to lay bare the immovable foundations of the City of God, and to show that the faith it has tried to resolve into a cloud of mist is a mountain of adamant. "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

From certain side-lights in the Book of Acts, Prof. Ramsay concludes that Paul's relatives, with the exception of "one kindly nephew," were against him, and that the family pride was wounded by his conversion. "Looking at these probabilities," Professor Ramsay concludes:—

We see a special force in Paul's words to the Philippians, that he had given up all for Christ, "for whom I suffered the loss of all things and do count them but refuse." These emphatic words suit the mouth of one who had been disowned by his family, and reduced from a position of wealth and influence in his nation to poverty and contempt.

In The North American Review, Dean Farrar writes a paper on "Some of the Problems of the Age," in which he says that our perils are—(1) The enormous multiplication of stupendous fortunes, (2) the abnormal growth of great cities, (3) the unparalleled increase of population, (4) the multiplicity of dangerous elements, (5) the deficiency of adequate charity, (6) the spread of democracy, (7) the decay of religious faith. And yet, while great fortunes are being made in England, America, Australia, and at the Cape, we have thousands who are suffering from the shrinkage in the value of investments once thought safe and good. It looks very much like taking money out of many pockets and putting it into a few. In all this there are elements of social discontent and danger that call for serious and prayerful consideration.

Dr. Parkhurst, who carried on such a brave struggle against New York corruption, has been speaking on the passion of money-making. He does not think it flourishes because the men who have it are intentionally sordid, "and have no blood in their hearts," but because their parents did not educate them into the "difficult capability of parting with their own possessions in the interests of, and for the bettering of others." They trusted to chance for this. Chance is trusted for much besides. Once the child's heart is turned to God, every grace may be learned; he only practises them on a larger scale, and in a larger world, when he becomes a man. Very young children can learn the joy of giving.

A Christmas Meditation.

As men count time, it is now many years since a Babe was born in lowliest circumstances at Bethlehem of Judea. But this birth was heralded with splendour before which the announcement of the heir to any emperor or king fades into insignificance. "The angel of the Lord appeared unto shepherds keeping watch by night, and the glory of the Lord shone around about them; and the angel said unto them, Fear not; for, behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."

That infant lying in a manger came to do a great work of deliverance. At first sight, how unfitted for such a task. He is a helpless Babe lying on his mother's breast, needing to be wrapped in swaddling clothes, to be fed and cared for. The powers of earth and hell muster for his destruction; his mother is a feeble woman, but the angels of God have charge of Him, and the rage of all adversaries is baffled. He lives and grows in wisdom and in stature, and in favour with God and man. The Babe of Bethlehem, the fugitive to Egypt, the boy at Nazareth, grew up through each human stage until the Man Christ Jesus became the Prophet of Galilee, the worker of miracles, the Teacher of truth higher than any revealed to anointed king or seer. He set forth in his own character every human and Divine perfection, and then He laid down his life on the cross that his blood might be an atonement for the sins of his people.

Thus did the Divine Redeemer, the eternal Son of God, become the Son of Man. He was made like unto his brethren. Bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh, in all points tempted as we are, yet without sin, it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren "that he might make reconciliation for the sins of the people," Heb. ii. 17. It is at this point that many worthy people start back saying, "I cannot believe that the death of Christ should have any effect on my sins. How can the shedding of the blood of another be transferred to me so that my guilt is thereby taken away?"

Now it is here that we begin, when enlightened by the Holy Spirit, to see the wisdom of God in redemption. The great mystery of redemption is that there should be a Redeemer at all, not that having such a Redeemer we should be benefited by Him. It surpasses all human or angelic thought to devise that salvation should spring from the Godhead, and be carried on to completion by God—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. It is the marvel of all time, of all eternity, that the eternal Son should join Himself to man so that in the one Person of Jesus Christ, the Godhead and the manhood were indissolubly united. This is wonder incomprehensible. Here is infinite wisdom and unfathomable love. Who by searching can find out God? But when once the Divine arrangement had been made, a course of action was begun more comprehensible by the limited faculties of man.

Jesus was the only Free Man. The sons of Adam had sold themselves into slavery—they were under the debt of sin. They had nothing to pay—they could not break their chains. They were the prisoners of helpless ruin. But Jesus was free. He was not in bondage to any—He owed no debt of sin, for He was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners. Then said He, "My brothers, I will break your bonds in my might; I will pay your debt out of my riches. I will go down into the dread Destroyer's kingdom, and in death trample on him that hath the power of Death. I, your Brother, your Kinsman, will do these things for you. Lo! now I have the keys of the invisible world and of Death, and set before you the open gates of glory. Will you not believe and enter?"

In thus offering the benefits of his victory, Jesus acts on principles common to mankind. This fundamental law of humanity is expressly recognised in the Mosaic legislation, Levit. xxv. 47, 48, 49. "If a sojourner or stranger wax rich by thee, and thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor and sell himself to the stranger . . . After that he is sold he may be redeemed again, one of his brethren may redeem him. . . . or any that is of kin may redeem him." Here is plainly declared the inherent right of a kinsman to redeem a kinsman. It was this right which our Great Elder Brother claimed and exercised when He ransomed his people from the power of the grave.

The men of a very recent generation saw this family principle acted before their eyes on a gigantic scale when Napoleon Bonaparte, having raised himself to the throne of France, also lifted up his family from obscurity, making his brothers to be kings over no inconsiderable part of Europe. The great conqueror offered crowns to his brothers, and because they accepted them he made them kings. Had they refused they would have remained in their original condition, notwithstanding his greatness and the performance of his brotherly duty.

Our Lord Jesus Christ, the God-Man, representative of mankind, won for Himself the right to offer unto his brethren the crown of everlasting life. They who believe his word, and accept his offer, have a right to the Tree of Life, and to enter through the gates into the city, Rev. xxii. 14. This great benefit comes to them not on account of any merit in them, but because of their relationship to their representative Brother and King. But they who do not accept his offer, remain in their sad condition; they are "condemned already, because they have not believed in the name of the only-begotten Son of God."

Surely we may once more on this Christmastide hear the song of the heavenly host, "Glory to God in the Highest." Let our answer be, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be on his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord." J. H.

IRISH PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONS.—The reports are at present very encouraging. In India rapid development is taking place, several new stations having been recently opened, and in China all the stations in Manchuria, abandoned on account of the riots, have been re-occupied. The Presbyterians of Londonderry have raised a guarantee fund of £250 a year, and are about to send out to India, as a missionary, Mr. O'Neill, one of the students, who offered his services to the last General Assembly for mission work.

THE UPPER NIGER.—Mr. Nott is now in England, pleading earnestly for more workers for the Upper Niger, to fill the gaps left by those who have laid down their lives at Lokoja. Comparing the present state of the Christians at Lokoja to what they were five or six years ago, he shows that now voluntary workers are going out from there every Sunday afternoon to evangelise the neighbouring villages, and speaks of a large number daily reading the Word of God. He also refers to the wonderful changes which have taken place in recent years in the Onitsha district, and specially mentioned Obosi, where there are a true-hearted body of Christians' who not only believe on the Lord Jesus, but who have suffered and are suffering for his sake.

REV. J. McNEILL AT CARDIFF.

After a week at Newport, Mon., and a week at Swansea, Rev. John McNeill began a fortnight's mission in Cardiff on Sunday, December 1. Much prayer was offered on behalf of this mission in churches of all denominations. Great faith, too, was manifested, in that Park Hall, to hold 2500 persons, and Rosebery Hall, to hold 10,000 persons, were engaged. The opening service on Sabbath afternoon was literally packed, so much so that the preacher himself had the greatest possible difficulty to get through the crowds, half-an-hour before the appointed time. Between seven and eight thousand people gathered at Rosebery Hall at 7 o'clock same evening. Such a multitude, at such an hour, was remarkable, services in churches being then held. On each occasion God gave to the preacher marvellous power. Many a shaft was driven home and many a life destiny decided, while the truth was poured forth. The sight of that sea of faces, all fastened on the Story of the Cross, was a standing proof that the Gospel has lost none of its old-time power to move the hearts of the multitude.

Through the second week meetings were held in Park Hall each afternoon and evening. The fearful weather seemed bent on spoiling the mission, but conspicuously failed, the average aggregate daily attendance being over 3000. Before the week was half done it could be seen that the work had taken deep root.

Sabbath week was a memorable day. The Park Hall was so full that the preacher was able to begin the service thirty minutes before the appointed time, and kept the audience spellbound for an hour and twenty minutes, turning over the treasures of the 23rd Psalm. Then at 7 o'clock Rosebery Hall held eight to nine thousand people, who feasted on Rev. iii. 20. Beyond question this was the largest religious meeting ever held within the precincts of a building in Cardiff.

There was fearful weather throughout last week, but the number at the meetings increased to a surprising extent. The climax came in the last meeting, when the whole audience arose to express its desire that Mr. McNeill should again come to Cardiff next winter for a month. At the close of the sermon the multitude of 3000 again arose to dedicate themselves to God. Those whose eyes saw, and whose ears heard, will not soon forget. Long may those impressions remain. B.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE.

The annual meeting of the Zenana Medical College was held on Friday, December 6, Rev. Dr. Hitchens presiding.

Rev. J. B. Barraclough, M.A., in an earnest speech, remarked upon the economy with which the work was carried on. Those who were not able to do much by large donations could help greatly if they would make the work known to their friends.

Rev. Dr. Bruce, in a very telling address, of which the keynote was. Divine sympathy, spoke of the first three missionary meetings, the message at the first being—Joy in a personal Saviour, "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy...unto you is born...a Saviour." He said if there was anyone who did not care to send the tidings abroad, it was because they did not know the joy of God's salvation for themselves. When they knew, then they would feel that Divine compassion which would make them respond to the message of the second missionary meeting, which was, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into his harvest." The message at the third meeting—at which women were present as well as men—was, "Go ye." He said there was no greater honour than to be a lady medical missionary; but no worker needs more the power of the Holy Spirit.

Miss Hulton, of the British Syrian Mission, gave some interesting sketches of the transformation which the Gospel of Christ Jesus had wrought in the homes of Syria. The way these poor ignorant ones lay hold of the teaching of God's Word, and seek to carry it out in their lives, is an example to Christians at home. Dr. Routh followed, emphasising the immense advantage of the two years' system of medical training in its missionary aspect.

A CHRISTMAS PLEA.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

"Is there yet any that is left of the house of Saul that I may show him kindness for Jonathan's sake?"—2 Sam. ix. 1.

This is a beautiful story: a Christmas story for all the year round, full of graciousness and love. All the more beautiful because it comes in amidst these scenes of battle and bloodshed—the smiting of Philistines and Syrians, and the return of the conqueror with the spoil of the stricken hosts.

See how a little bit of love lives in God's world. The whole story, and this very phrase, "the kindness of God," grows out of an incident that had happened some twenty years before. David had been hunted and hounded by the mad jealousy of Saul until his life was always in danger. Spies tracked him everywhere, and soldiers were ready to spring upon him. His wife, Saul's daughter, had let him down out of the window, and he fled for his life. Then it was that he found in Jonathan his faithful friend and protector: found a love that was true and deep and tender as a woman's, as rare between man and man as it is beautiful. In the dusk of the even Jonathan came forth to tell David of the king's purpose. Jonathan has grasped the hand of David, and swears to be his friend; and then with a strange foreseeing, he, the king's son, made this fugitive outlaw who carries his life in his hand, swear, "Thou shalt not only, while I live, show me the kindness of the Lord that I die not, but also thou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house for ever; no, not when the Lord hath cut off the enemies of David every one from the face of the earth. And Jonathan caused David to swear again, because he loved him as he loved his own soul."

That oath and that hour were never forgotten. Five years later Saul had gone forth to battle against the Philistines, only to be utterly defeated. He himself was killed, or worse than killed. Maddened by the bitterness of his anguish he fell upon his own sword. Jonathan also was slain. Then the tidings of all this disaster reached the palace. The faithful nurse, eager for the safety of Jonathan's son, snatched him up, and fled with him; but in her hands came trouble upon trouble, for the little lad fell, and was so hurt that he was lamed for life. She carried him as best she could to a place of safety, keeping his life a secret, probably; and there, with the little lame lad, she dwelt on the outskirts of Palestine, on the verge of the desert. And she cared for him, and sought to save his life in these wild and troubled times, when it was a hard thing for one so near to royalty to save his head.

As soon as David was made king, and the opportunity given, he recalled the kindness of Jonathan, and began to inquire if any were left of the house of Saul to whom he could show kindness for Jonathan's sake. It was a bold thing to do. If any of Saul's household lived he could not expect them to be in any way his friends; indeed, he might well expect them to be the source of all kinds of plots and disaffections. If there are any of that house still living, prudence said—Let them be. The less there were the better. Besides that, the king was very busy. We read that David reigned over all Israel, and David executed justice and judgment unto all the people. He was his own Lord Chancellor, and Commander-in-chief, and Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Lord Chief Justice—enough for one man, surely. But David said, "Is there any left of the house of Saul that I may show him kindness for Jonathan's sake?"

It is good to see that bit of kindness living and living on, and blossoming and bearing fruit. I know it does not always. And when it does not, is there anything more miserable in the world? I know of nothing more wretched than when a man gets so rich, and so great, and so busy that the kindnesses of long ago, the blessed little bits of love, are forgotten. Alas for the man in whom all the ministry of early years has faded into a cold forgetfulness. He is a miserable man who has no debts except those which can be paid in hard cash. We remember that the chief butler forgot Joseph. It was inconvenient to remember in one's greatness the friendships of dark hours and troubled times. Well, that is a meanness I would hesitate to ascribe to the devil.

I know right well that on the other side there is often a fussy exaggeration of some fancied service that thinks it cannot ever be sufficiently paid. But I am thinking now of the friend of our youth, or of some tender soul whose love has ennobled us, whose memory has made us better men. Some old soul it may be whose kindness made our early days blest with sunshine; or some friend whose wise counsel and ready help were to us a salvation. At this season of the year, recall their kindness, and let it live again. Let their faces look in upon you, and their hands clasp yours. And this week begin to search for those to whom you can pay these debts of long ago.

David has not to inquire long before he finds his opportunity. No man need ever let the prompting of a generous instinct evaporate for want of opportunity. There is always somebody at hand. If you don't know any such, I will give you their addresses. Ziba was a servant of Saul, and they fetched him into the presence of the king. He was a time-serving man, when it was hard to be anything else; who was much better off than his master's son, and who was quite ready to turn the chances of the day to his own advantage. And Ziba told how Jonathan had yet a son, lame on his feet, and that he was in the house of Machir in Lodebar. And with great joy David sent for Mephibosheth to come to the palace.

Poor lad! He had dwelt only amongst those who looked upon David as the enemy of their house, the spoiler of their possessions; and, trembling, the lame prince fell down frightened before the king, and humbled himself. But graciously David lifted him up. "Fear not," said the king; "I will surely show thee kindness for Jonathan thy father's sake, and will restore thee all the land of Saul thy father; and thou shalt eat bread at my table continually. And Mephibosheth dwelt in Jerusalem, for he did eat continually at the king's table, and was lame on both his feet."

So did the kindness of Jonathan live, and spring up and bear this good fruit. Love lived and triumphed in spite of battles, and splendour, and all the rush of life; and the lame Mephibosheth sits at the table of the king, because long ago Jonathan had shown kindness to a persecuted fugitive.

And to us gathered to-day in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, is not this a parable? The King's Son, and Himself the King of kings and Lord of lords, He hath come forth to us, not in generous pity only. He though He was rich yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich; He laid down his life for us, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God. The parable is lost. This love of the Lord Jesus stoops from heights and touches depths, and spreads out into lengths and breadths such as none else ever knew. David had done nothing amiss; but while we were yet sinners He loved us, and delivered us, and hath made us kings and priests unto God. And now shall this love that passeth knowledge be less to us than the kindness of Jonathan was to David? By all that life of love, by all that He hath wrought for us, and all the glory that waits to be revealed, let us make haste to ask: Who is there to whom I can show kindness for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake?

Begin with those that are nearest to us. It may be that there has arisen something of misunderstanding and ill-will. Remember how much God has forgiven us; what patience and tenderness He has shown us; how freely and fully He forgave. Life is short; opportunities are growing less. Use the opportunity of Christmas, if need be, to let the bygones be bygones. About the manger of the Holy Babe of Bethlehem, that pledge of God's goodwill to us, every one pledge yourself resolutely to send forth your love, and make the world glad with some deed of true kindness. You cannot compound in this matter and cover neglected duties at home by charities to others. They who are nearest to us have the first claim.

And it may be needful to plead with father and mother for the son and daughter, with brother for brother. Is it needful to plead with son and daughter for the old father and mother at home? I have sometimes sat in the little cottage where the old folks were, the old man in the big settle by the fire, the old mother over by the window where the flowers grow. And as I have talked with them of London the lip has been bitten, the head has been shaken, and presently, as the tear has crept down the wrinkled cheek, there has come a sigh: "I have got a boy or a girl up there somewhere, but we have not heard from him for a long time now." I know that it is not always so harsh and cruel as it seems; that it is sometimes difficult to write; and that, not from any ill purpose, but from want of thought, the days have grown into weeks, and the weeks into months without a word. In the name of our great Father in Heaven, I plead with you, make glad the heart of the old father and mother. Before another Christmas they may be gone. Put all the tenderness and love that you can crowd into their remaining days.

And beyond this I would plead with you for a great host of suffering, hungry men and women and children. Let there be a diligent inquiry. What more can I do than I have done? How can I kindle yet another fire for some poor body, and make life a little bit brighter and better? There is winter only, and no Christmas, until this great pity and eagerness to help do come into our hearts, and go forth clothed in deeds.

MOUNT HERMON GIRLS' HOMES.

The "old girls'" annual meeting was held at the Orphanage, Cambridge-avenue, on Tuesday week. Some fifty young women, who had been brought up in the Homes and are now occupied in various vocations, were present, and the very pleasant re-union with old friends was evidently greatly enjoyed. For Mrs. Parry the gathering suggested something of a "harvest home," and it was gratifying, as giving cause for thankfulness, to see before her so many whom she could regard as the fruit of the care and training of past years.

After tea a short, bright meeting was held. Rev. J. Bateman (late of Norfolk), Mr. Russell Hurditch, Miss Hoskyns, and Miss Cooke gave brief addresses. Mrs. Parry gave a few particulars of matters respecting the orphanage, and closed with loving words of admonition and counsel. She also presented a Bible to the girl who had remained longest in one situation, and another to the one who had kept her first situation for some years. The length of service which secured these Bibles spoke well for the good character of the recipients.

THE AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—With the approach of Christmas Mr. J. T. Morton has repeated the kindness he has so long shown to the aged Christian poor, for whose support this Society has been at work for nearly ninety years. He has sent to Mr. J. E. Hazelton a substantial gift of thousands of yards of flannel, hundreds of boxes of groceries, 174 pairs of blankets, together with a good supply of coals. It may be hoped that so good an example will be followed by many of the Society's friends who, though they may not find it convenient to give on so large a scale as that referred to, can nevertheless send donations which will prove of the best service. It is a noble record to have assisted upwards of 6000 of the class for whose welfare the institution was founded, and to have been helped to do this throughout the years by subscriptions and gifts which have amounted to upwards of £246,500.

"AVENGE, O LORD, THY SLAUGHTERED SAINTS."

(From the New York Independent.)

Oh for a year, a month, a day of Oliver Cromwell, Lord Protector of England! What means this long delay? Will England, will Christian Europe, never awake, and never command this horrible slaughter of the Armenians by the Turks to cease? The Sassûn massacre was horrible, and seemed alone enough to compel the intervention of the Powers and the extinction of the rule of the Turk. But the five or ten thousand there murdered are now not less than fifty thousand, not in Sassûn alone, but in Erzrûm, in Diarbekir, in Aintab, in Marash, in Balburt, in Trebizond, in Bitlis, in Constantinople even, in a dozen large towns and hundreds of villages. They are desolated; the men are slaughtered, the women and children are seized and held, or are wandering beggars. They will die by the tens of thousands this winter of starvation—and nothing is done. Not even one beggarly guardboat has entered the Bosphorus. The Sultan sits on his throne, now mocking, now beseeching, while all the time the massacres continue unchecked, unavenged. How long, Salisbury? How long, Emperor William? How long, Lord God Almighty?

Whatever Abdul Hamid may pretend or even wish, his Government, his people, are bent on blotting out the Armenian people. That is something which the general fellowship of civilised people ought not to endure. England and the other nations by treaty responsible for Turkey ought to unite to suppress the outrage; and even America ought to be willing to join in putting down this worse than piracy. Let us be allowed some part in it. Let us demand our part in it. The blood boils as we think of these nameless atrocities, without precedent, which set at defiance all laws of international comity. We call on England, we cry to England to put the strong hand of her fleets on Turkey, as once Admiral Blake sailed the Mediterranean. Will the Powers glare jealously at each other and allow the Moslem utterly to annihilate, in this Christian century, the Christian people of Turkey? Will not one Power, will not England, as in the days of Cromwell, take the noble step? England could dare when King Theebaw was murdering his miserable harem and courtiers in Burma; has she no heart, has she no courage when a hundred times as many of her own Christian brothers and sisters are slain close under her own surveillance by the Government for whose existence she is chiefly responsible? O England, Christian England, where sleeps thy faith, thy duty?

Perhaps the duty is ours if the Powers of Europe fail. But here is another instant pressing duty of ours, that of giving aid to the starving tens, more likely hundreds, of thousands. Our missionaries and the European people in Constantinople say that not less than a million dollars will be needed to clothe and feed the victims of these barbarities during this present winter. This aid must be immediate. Do not wait. There are committees already in the field. Let every church take up a generous contribution. The need is imperative, is beyond what we can supply. Begin immediately. Let individuals not wait for churches. Let the great commercial organisations everywhere take the lead. Let every section, every city have its committee. The money will be wisely appplied by responsible persons in Turkey, and perhaps the Red Cross organisation will aid in the work. This we can do, and let us do it speedily and generously.

The latest news from Eastern Europe shows only too plainly that a Moslem crusade is following up outrage and terror. The special correspondent of The Daily News writes:—"Every day news reaches Constantinople of the conversion to Mohammedanism of hundreds, and even thousands, of Armenians, who are offered the choice of Islam or death. Can any one blame these poor creatures, who see themselves forgotten by their God, delivered up by the united Powers of Europe to slaughter, and without a friend in the world for hope in life?

"Yet there are many who elect to die martyrs for their faith. At Marash, an Armenian, an ordained clergyman of the English Church, was offered the choice. He selected death, and was killed with slow torture. At Kharput two Protestant preachers and a Syrian priest were murdered for the same cause. At Ichme a number of Armenians had sought refuge in the Gregorian Church. They were taken out one by one and asked to choose. Fifty-two died martyrs, the aged Protestant pastor Krikor being among the first butchered. At Ouzoon, not far from Ichme, on the far bank of the Euphrates, a large number of Armenians were captured, and led towards the neighbouring Turkish village to be compelled to change their faith. At a point where the road follows the river bank, fifty-five of them rushed into the water and were drowned, rather than deny their religion, the Turks shooting at them the while. At Hoh eighty-five were killed in this way. Their wives and daughters were taken into Moslem houses. Thousands of young women and girls have disappeared. They are not dead yet. They are in Turkish harems, and when their masters tire of them they will be quietly destroyed.

"A letter from Mr. Hallward, the British Vice-Consul at Van, describes the condition of the Armenians in that city as too appallingly terrible for words. Thousands of women and girls are wandering in the snow-piled streets without shelter or food. They are bare-foot, and their ravishers have stripped them of every garment but a chemise, and in many cases have left them but a mere clout to conceal their nakedness."

THE AFRICAN IN THE WEST INDIES.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone recently visited the West Indies, and he has described what he saw among the people in a pamphlet entitled "The African in the West Indies." Summarising his conclusions, the Bishop refers to the oft-repeated statement that the African will not work, and replies: "This is not so evident to our minds after what we have seen in Jamaica. We are well acquainted with the sort of eye service which he has so fully developed in his days of forced labour. We know, too, his want of thoroughness and accuracy in detail. But we ask whether this latter has been found to be the case where he has been properly apprenticed and taught? The answer is that no one can turn out more finished work anywhere than properly taught black people in the West Indies and the Southern States of America. And, as regards the other point, we think that we also discovered that whenever the African has a proper stimulus before him, he can work as no other can work under such a sun.

"For instance, on one occasion the Bishop of Jamaica pointed out to us scores of small proprietary holdings on the mountain sides of Jamaica. 'There live,' he said, 'the Jamaica peasantry, who are going to prove that the black man can work and succeed.' No longer mere hands on an estate, they have their own farms, and one had only to see the coffee, bananas, oranges, and other crops looking so flourishing around their modest homes to perceive the truth of what he said. We have also been told that Africans do not usually succeed away from their previous environments. We reply that we have not only West Indians in Africa already in many callings, but that Jamaicans succeed on the mainland of South America and elsewhere, and these Africans have marvellously survived forcible transportation from their homes in Africa to circumstances of hard bondage in the West Indies. We should, therefore, say that their past history has made them most adaptable to changes of climate, especially when the climate in question is that of their own land."

THE BEST CHRISTMAS GIFT.

Gifts have rightly enough come to be associated with Christmas: was not our Lord's Advent the promise of the supreme gift by God to man? And now that Christ has returned to the Father that He might give gifts to men, what better gift could one man or one nation give to another than the record of his wondrous life, death, resurrection, ascension, and session in power at the Father's right hand? This is the moving and immovable principle that has ever actuated our friend, Mrs. A. E. Robertson, of the Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. Year after year, and often amid much physical weakness, her ardent spirit has sustained her in the work of scattering, in the needy places of the world, copies or portions of the Book whose contents make wise unto salvation. Toilsome in a sense this work may have been, but most gladsome in another, for testimonies come in from many lands telling of the light that is shed into darkened hearts by these gifted copies of the Scripture. In her latest report Mrs. Robertson (whose address is Chesils, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W.) gives many gratifying transcripts from her correspondents' letters; some of these we reproduce, heartily commending the Society and its hon. secretary to the generous Christmas remembrance of our readers:—

"From a worker in France:—"The most recent case of conversion through the work of your Society is that of an educated young man who, some months ago, with tears in his eyes, confessed to having been on the brink of a precipice, morally and religiously, when this sacred volume was offered to him, and it was the means of bringing him back from the mouth of the gulf. He has since procured copies for members of his family, who also find much pleasure in reading the Scriptures, and it was the influence of the Book on him that lead others to read a 'Protestant book,' as they call the Bible."

Signor Capellini, of Rome, says:—

"The free distribution of the Word of God is our great means to draw souls to hear the Gospel. These Bibles are given to those soldiers who never had one. They are read by the colonels and other officers, who often, in their turn, come and ask for a copy of the Word. How many cases of conversion I might relate, brought about by the simple reading of the Word of God! How many young priests, who also have to go under arms for their time, have refused to return to their vocation, choosing the pure Gospel, and desiring to preach it in sincerity!"

A worker in Tunis writes:—

"Since I wrote last we have been called to rejoice over an Italian family converted. The Bible has brought them light and life, and has fully opened their eyes. The son is especially bright, and loves so much the story of the 'lost sheep.' He was long in hospital, and read the Testament, coming to us full of questions. He found Jesus was the answer to the need of his heart. Yesterday, three men, who knew nothing, came to the meeting as the result of receiving one of your portions. Others were gratefully received. Many are too poor to buy."

The following testimony is from far Afghanistan:—

"You may like to hear the effect of a single Bible on a tribe of Afghans. Eight years ago one of their leading men, who had heard about Christianity, and desired to know more, received a Protestant Testament through an officer on duty here, with whom he used occasionally to talk about religion. The officer left, and eight years elapsed, when another officer in the district reported that the man had been diligently reading the Book, and was convinced of its teaching. There being no missionary nearer than Bunnu, I undertook the journey, taking with me a supply of Bibles and Testaments (which your grant enabled me to get) in Arabic and Persian. For some days I was the guest of this man, and was not a little pleased to find the effect the Bible had had on his life; he had been reading it diligently for the eight years he had possessed it, as its well-worn appearance attested; and he confessed that he had found in it the words of eternal life. The people of his village, including their priests and influential men, had been accustomed to gather in his house to hear him read and preach from his wonderful book, and many had been anxious to read and search for themselves."

These are but samples of many delightful tributes to the power of God's Word found in this report.

"WHEN CHRISTMAS DAYS ARE GONE."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

Christmas Day opened brightly. Over the country a pure mantle of crystal frost was spread; everything glistened with its tiny gems, as the sun shone out. Even in the busy city there was an air of rest.

Percy Glanton sat at his late breakfast, alone, and disconsolate. He had indulged in the pleasures of sin, had lived a foolish life; but on that morning he had no anticipation of anything to cheer or gladden him, so he willingly lingered over the frugal meal.

Six Christmas Days had gone since he turned his back on the home away in the village among the hills. Yet he was thinking of it as he tossed himself back n the rocking-chair by the window, after his table had been cleared by the landlady, who always felt some sort of pity for him, trying though he had been with his late hours and noisy visitors. She once had a son, and perhaps the memory of his dear face made her tender towards the "somebody's lads" who were homeless.

Six years! But he could feel around him the old home atmosphere; he could see those bright eyes that once watched over him in a long illness, and hear the pleading voice that begged h.m to stay and give no heed to the angry words of an intemperate father. Then he began to ask himself if he had inherited that father's weakness; if not, why had he dared to touch that which had ruined one older than he? What was to be the outcome of the quarrel that had led to his dismissal at the shop where he had worked?

These and other disquieting thoughts caused shadows to flit across a face that once had been a mother's pride. He turned a careless look upon the passers in the street below, and his eyes rested on a soldier. The man was looking from house to house, as if in search of someone, and as his face turned toward the window Percy flushed and started. "If that isn't my cousin, McCarrow, I never saw him," he said to himself. "Whatever could bring him here? I thought he was still in India."

He was not mistaken; his mother's nephew had returned to England, a Christian man, and visiting his aunt on her dying bed, he determined for her sake to find the long-lost boy.

"Please, Mr. Glanton, sir, here's a soldier inquiring for you," said Mrs. Hurndle, looking anxiously at Percy.

"Show him up here," he said, but ere she turned to go down, McCarrow was on the top stair.

"Glad to have found you at last, Percy."

"What brings you here, Tom?" and the cousins clasped hands, and looked into each other's faces.

"You may well ask that question. I have come back to the old country a different man, and God has a hand in my coming here, I think."

For an hour they chatted over much that had happened since they last met, and the story of a renewed heart was told.

"What can you be thinking of, Percy, squandering away your youth and health! I haven't long left your mother, and I tell you, it was touching to see her. She said to me, 'Tom, he was my all; and the devil robbed me of my boy. I'll have to spend another Christmas alone;' and she cried till her poor heart seemed breaking."

"Stop, Tom; you take the spirit out of me. How can I go to her now? I've disgraced her name, and my sins are scarlet ones indeed."

"Percy, listen. When Christmas days are gone, and you and I, with the mothers we have forgotten to honour, stand before God—how then? Shall we find a straight and good excuse?"

Percy did not answer, and McCarrow ventured further to say—

"I wouldn't wonder if her Christmas days are gone, and no one to smooth her pillow, or say even a 'thank you' for all the loving care of past years. It is hard, lad, to see how they have toiled for us, and denied themselves, and poor is the return they get. Would God I could have my mother back, just to be to her what a son should be, but it is too late, too late."

As he folded his arms on the table and hid his face, Percy got up and paced the room. He was troubled; he knew his comrades would soon be after him, yet an arresting hand seemed on him, and thoughts of the old home made him tremble.

"Tom, could we get there to-night; how is time going?"

"Do you mean it? thank God, I'll go and see about trains. Make ready quickly," and while he was gone Percy prepared to start while the thought was hot.

"Going to see his mother! Well! Well! that soldier must have done this. I never thought there was any good in a soldier; there's no telling anything;" so thought Mrs. Hurndle when she heard of his going.

It was midnight when Tom McCarrow and Percy Glanton reached the village, after a long walk from the nearest station. Snow was silently falling, the moon gave a faint glimmer, so that the cottage home was visible.

They stood at the gate—a light shone in a side window.

"That used to be my room, Tom, we'd better not disturb her till morning." The blind was moved, and the woman who attended saw and recognised McCarrow, and went down to the door.

"I remembered who it was," she said, "but who—?"

"This is her son with me; we are late; is she sleeping?"

The woman lighted a fire, and bade them warm themselves, while she told them how often the dying woman had asked if Tom would find Percy. "And the end isn't far off," she said, as she went to prepare her.

"Don't you believe it? 'tis true, he's come"—the astonished look was on her face as he entered softly.

"Mother," he said gently.

The dim eyes wandered over his face, and she answered, "My own Percy, where?"

"Here, mother, come home at Christmas for your forgiveness."

"Come very close. Oh, yes, it is my boy at last, my own dear——," and the trembling arms made their last effort and clasped him to her, and when they unclasped the fingers she was gone.

Daylight entered the room, so still, so cold; a smile of satisfaction lingered on the pallid face, and in the silence there knelt the returned son. Her words of old came back to him, her God spoke to him, and from all that transpired in that solemn time it seems sure that when Christmas days are gone he will be her boy again in a truer sense, and at home for evermore.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 22.

The inheritance of Zelophehad unto his daughters.—Num. xxxvi. 2.

From the earliest, the germ-principle of the emancipation of woman, and her right to stand on an equality with man, is recognised in Scripture. These women were heiresses in their own right, and might marry as they thought best. Christianity in this respect, as in so many others, is the fulfilment of the divine thought in the older dispensation. Ruth was the prototype of Mary of Bethany, Rahab of the Syrophenician woman, Hagar of Lydia.

The inheritance of woman in the nature of Christ.—There are certain qualities in the Son of Man peculiarly adapted for the heart of woman. Tenderness for her many tears, "Woman, why weepest thou?" Sympathy in her quest for a love that will not fail, "Mary." An answer to her many questions, "Woman, believe me." Strength for her clinging weakness, "Forbid her not." Hope for her despair, "If thou couldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God." Oh woman, remember Him who is the counterpart of thy need, and who offers thee Himself. "The same is my sister."

The inheritance of woman in the work of Christ.—She is called to enrich men by bringing to them her inheritance. So the daughters of Zelophehad brought their land to their husbands, and the women bore the tidings of the risen Lord to the disciples. Thus women, receiving much from fellowship with Christ, come to men, steeped in materialism and sense, telling of a purer, fairer life, and summoning them to inherit it.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 23.

"The Lord thy God bare thee."—Deut. i. 31.

A safe carriage was that! In his love and in his pity God redeemed them, and bare them, and carried them all the days of old. When the little lad was tired and complained of his head, his father bade a servant carry him to his mother, but God does not hand over his children to his servants, He carries them Himself. When we realise that his everlasting arms are underneath, it is safer riding than any the ingenuity of man can devise.

"In all the way." There are great varieties in the way, sometimes the sleepers are badly laid, and the carriage rocks and jolts; sometimes the gradient is steep, and the progress tedious; sometimes the pilgrim has to go afoot, climbing with difficulty from ridge to ridge; sometimes the route lies through a territory infested with enemies, and haunted by miasma; but all the way, those gentle and unwearied arms bear us up and on.

"All the days." Never a day without its cross, its lesson, its discipline, its peril; but never a day that God does not bear us up in his hands, as some mighty river bears up the boat of the missionary explorer. Through wilds, past villages of infuriated savages, over reefs and rocks, the patient river bears the voyager and his goods. Thus does God carry us. The Good Shepherd carries the lambs in his bosom. Why then should we dread the future, or quail before the faces of our foes?

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 24.

"Wheresoever the Lord our God forbad us."—Deut. ii. 37.

This chapter is full of restrictions and prohibitions. There were territories which the people were forbidden to enter at that time; though afterwards, in the days of David, Solomon, and Hezekiah, they were included in the possessions of the chosen people.

There are temporary limitations in all lives. Paul was forbidden to preach the Word in Asia, when first he came on its frontiers, though two or three years after he so filled it with his teaching that the trade of the silversmiths was affected.

Limitations in our usefulness.—Provinces of holy endeavour seem shut against you, as the Gentile world from the public ministry of Jesus. Nevertheless, do your best in what is open, as He did for the Jews, and the rest will be unbarred; but if not, in God's good time, the field will be cultivated by hands specially instructed and prepared.

Limitations in knowledge.—There are mysteries which, in the earlier stages of their experience, are not made known to the saints; but which we come to know, as we follow on to know the Lord. Live up to what you know, and the light will break.

Limitations in experience.—Not to everyone is it given to feel Christ's love, as Rutherford did. Some are excluded from the sunny realms, as Cowper was. Such is the choice of God for them, and it must be best; but they shall all attain one day to the stature of the perfect man, and possess the blessedness from which they are now restrained.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 25.

"Speak no more unto Me of this matter."—Deut. iii. 26.

We are to pray without ceasing; always praying, never fainting; asking, seeking, knocking. But there are some subjects concerning which God says, "Speak no more unto Me of this." In some cases these topics have to do with others, but more often with ourselves, as in the case of Paul (2 Cor. xii. 9).

It is an awful thing when God says of certain individuals, Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone; and when the conviction is wrought within us that the sin unto death is being committed, concerning which even the Apostle John said, "I do not say that he should pray for it." Such times come comparatively rarely; and as long as you feel able to pray for another, so long as no negative is spoken, you may be sure that God waits to be entreated, and that your prayer will speed.

But have you not realised at times that God has said about some earthly boon you were craving: "Child, do not ask Me more, leave it with Me; I know what you want and what is best for you. Seek first my kingdom, and all these things, literally or in their equivalent, shall be added." It is well when we have been praying eagerly, to allow God's winnowing-fan to pass over our petitions, to winnow away all that is not in his mind to give, so that only those desires may remain which his Spirit has indicted, and which He is therefore pledged to bestow. If He does not give the exact thing you ask, He will give the Pisgah view and more grace.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26.

"The Lord hath taken you to be unto Him a people of inheritance."—Deut. iv. 20.

The Apostle prays that we may know the riches of the glory of God's inheritance in his saints. God is our inheritance, and we are his. We are called to possess Him; He desires to possess us. He will yield crops of holy helpfulness to those who diligently seek Him, and He demands crops of holy love and devotion from us.

What Sovereign Grace is here!—There was nothing in us to distinguish us from others. We were but part of the great moorland waste, when He fenced us in, and placed us under his tillage and husbandry. It is by the grace of God that we are what we are.

What Responsibility!—Three times over in this chapter we are bidden to take heed to ourselves. It is no small thing to have been the subjects of God's special workmanship; because He is a jealous God, very quick to mark the least symptom of declension, and very searching in his dealing and discipline. As we learn here, our God is a consuming fire, a jealous God.

What Hope!—We cannot derive much from ourselves, however we toil and strive. Self cannot discipline self to any advantage. The field is worked out. The husbandman must put into us what He would take out of us: He needs therefore to have almost infinite resources. But these are God's and He can make all grace abound towards us, that we, alway having all sufficiency in all things, may abound unto every good work.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 27.

"That it might be well with them."—Deut. v. 29.

Here is a sigh from the Divine heart. It recalls the tears of the Lord Jesus over Jerusalem. The people insisted on their willingness to do all that was required of them, but they were destined to learn and teach that the will may be present, without the power; just as a sick man may have the will to walk across his bedroom, and will fall to the floor because he has no strength.

God's Commandments are for our Welfare.—We find men shrinking from consecration to complete obedience because they fear that it will mean loss and pain. There may be loss and pain but only in the excision of things that they would be the first to put away, if they understood their nature and out-working as God does. Those who obey God most literally, find the most blessedness in life, whether now or hereafter.

We approve them with our Will.—More than once the people insisted that they would do as God commanded. We are not so destitute of moral perception as not to see the beauty of a life wholly yielded to God; but let us not rest content with this, or we may have yet to cry with the Apostle, The law is holy, just, and good, but I am carnal, sold under sin.

God wants the Heart.—He will not trust Himself to us, so long as the heart is a stranger to the indwelling of the Divine Spirit. "O that there were such a heart in them." We need to cry to Him to create in us a clean heart, and to ask that he would exchange the heart of stone for one of flesh.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 28.

"Thou shalt love."—Deut. vi. 5.

"Lovest thou Me?"

"Who art thou, Lord, that I should love Thee?"

"I am He that liveth, but I died; I loved thee, and gave Myself for thee; I have made thee mine for ever in a bond that even death cannot break; I shall never be at rest till thou art with Me where I am."

"Indeed I would love thee; but how?"

"Thou shalt love Me with all thine heart, and with all thine soul, and with all thy might."

"This were impossible unless Thou give me the love thou requirest."

"This I will do for thee, since love is of God. Only obey these simple directions:

"1. Abstain from all wrath, anger, malice, evil speaking, and all else that would grieve my Holy Spirit.

"2. Yield thyself to the Spirit, that He may produce in thee his choice fruit—Love. 'The fruit of the Spirit is love.' 'He sheds love abroad in the heart.'"

"3. Consider my love to thee, especially that I died for thee when thou wert yet in thy sins.

"4. Believing that thou hast received the love of the Spirit, begin to let it work through thy life to all around thee.

"5. If thy heart is unwilling to love any, put thy will on my side, and believe that I will work in thee to will and to do of my own good pleasure."

C.M.S. AND CHINA.—The C.M.S. has now determined to send out to the Fu-kien province of China the lady missionaries who were kept back in the autumn owing to the massacre at Ku-cheng, and probably they will sail next month. This decision has not been arrived at, however, without an animated debate in committee. It was at first suggested that the ladies should be allowed to proceed to the stations to which they had been assigned, but some of the oldest and most trusted members of the committee strongly opposed such a proposal, and it was eventually determined that the ladies should proceed to Fu-chow, and there remain until the home committee shall sanction an advance further inland.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Thy kingdom come."—Matt. vi. 10.

IT is recommended that either Psalm lxxviii. or Heb. xi. 24-40 be read in connection with this review. Both these Scriptures contain a summary of the facts with which this quarter's lessons deal.

The period covered by this series is about 400 years, extending from the death of Joshua to the death of Saul. Not the least important lesson is that suggested by the progress manifested in the people themselves. At the close of Saul's reign the people are still far from what they ought to be, yet they are different from what they were during the period of the Judges. God has been training them, as He trains us all, by failures, and sins, and distresses.

Other lessons will gather round the prominent persons introduced to us. Gideon, by his triumph over the Midianites, illustrates the possibility of gaining seemingly impossible victories, and the methods in which those victories may be ours. The story of Ruth illustrates what true decision is, how much it costs, and to what true blessing it leads. Samuel appears first as an example for the imitation of all young people. He was conspicuous for his obedience to his mother, and for his early surrender to God. These were the basis of his noble character and service afterwards. As a man he illustrates the unselfishness, the fearlessness, the faithfulness, which should characterise all true service. Those who seek to be like Samuel the boy, will not be destitute of the qualities that made him so noble a man.

The lessons that gather round Saul and his very eventful and tragic life are very valuable. How exceedingly promising the commencement! Yet how disastrous the close. Enforce the teaching of such a melancholy failure. Show how he failed first by not waiting for God in quiet confidence (1 Sam. xiii.), and next, by partial obedience, which God accounted no obedience at all (1 Sam. xv.). Little things they appear; but how serious the evils they brought after them. He became a prey to the cruellest passions of which man is capable—envy, pride, ambition, hatred, wilfulness. It has been said that Solomon's description in Prov. i. 24-32, seems to have been a portrait of Saul.

David suggests lessons of another character. His choice to be king illustrates the difference between God's estimate and man's. His training for his exalted future was obtained during his faithful service as a shepherd. The real strength of his character was his faith in God, as evidenced in his victory over Goliath, for it is always "faith that overcomes the world." His attachment to Jonathan illustrates the nature of true friendship.

Circumstances have changed, but the godliness that made David's life so noble, and the lack of which made Saul's so lamentable a failure, is just as needful to-day.

PRISONERS OF WAR.—The United Presbyterian Missionary Record gives an interesting account of work done amongst Chinese prisoners of war in Japan. One of their missionaries in Newchang, Rev. G. Douglas, obtained permission to travel to Japan to visit some of these poor soldiers, many of whom were lying wounded in the military hospitals. In one place he found three hundred imprisoned in a heathen temple. Exiled from their native land in a strange and, to them, hostile country, with sore hearts or wounded bodies, they welcomed with great delight this friend who had travelled so far to comfort them. They listened with new interest to his words, and Mr. Douglas had the pleasure of carrying back to China letters from many of these prisoners to their dear ones at home. Surely this instance of practical Christianity will bear fruit after many days.

ARCHIE'S CHRISTMAS CARD.

WHO does not love the happy Christmas time, bringing as it does so many joys and pleasures, and warm greetings of friendship and love from friends far and near!

Boys and girls especially love this joyous season which commemorates the time when God gave to mankind his Unspeakable Gift.

For weeks and months before they have been devising plans whereby they hope to give happy surprises to those they love. All their pennies have been treasured up for this purpose, and when the spending time actually comes how puzzled they are to know what to purchase. There are many young people, however, who have no money of their own, and who must turn sorrowfully away from all the beautiful things they see, although they also wish to buy some little gift for those they love.

Archie Grant was a boy who belonged to this latter class. Were he to spend even a small part of his earnings his overwrought mother would have to work the harder. It was strange that at that particular time the words of his Sabbath-school teacher should come into his mind. Surely he thought Mr. Black knew little about one of his scholars at least, when, on retiring the previous Sunday, he wished him a "Happy Christmas and a Bright New Year."

Just another day, and then Christmas. As Archie hastened homewards he pondered in his mind how it could be possible for it to be a happy time for him, seeing his desires could not be fulfilled.

On reaching home he was glad to find that his father was already there. That evening he had passed the door of the "White Swan" without entering. Mr. Grant really loved his brave, hard-working son, but, unfortunately, he loved strong drink also. Mr. Grant eyed him keenly, and realised, perhaps for the first time, how pinched and anxious-looking he had become. "Well, Archie, what would make you happy this Christmas?" "I'd like to buy ever so many things for mother and Polly, but that requires money, and we have none," he added, with a sigh. "But there is one thing, father, that you could do that would make me very happy indeed; and, besides, I'm sure all the other things would soon follow."

"Well, then, tell me what it is. You needn't be afraid to speak out." Archie's heart beat faster as he heard his father speak thus, for many a time both he and his mother had been justly afraid of him. Seeing his hesitation, Mr. Grant again said, "Come, tell me; and, if I can, you shall have your wish."

"Last Sabbath," said Archie, "our Sunday-school teacher taught us such a beautiful Christmas lesson; and, on finishing, he said that if we were to take his advice we would have a happy Christmas and a bright New Year." Mr. Grant was disappointed that Archie did not at once ask for something that money could buy, and interrupted him by saying, "Well, lad, you don't seem to believe what your teacher told you, or else you wouldn't have asked me about it."

Archie felt vexed at his father's words, and a crimson glow suffused his pale cheeks as he answered, "Oh, father, I believe all Mr. Black said. But I am only a boy, and cannot do much to make others happy; so I thought you and I together might do as teacher wished." Mr. Grant felt very impatient; but, not wishing to appear unkind, replied moodily, "Well, then, tell me what he said, and I'll think about it."

"I cannot tell you about our Christmas lesson so nicely as Mr. Black did," began Archie timidly. "While preparing our lesson he went over all the names given to the Lord Jesus, and out of the whole he chose his name of 'Governor.' I love Him with all my heart; and wouldn't you like Him to be your Governor, too, father? Our governor helps us to do hard things; and, after all, it is not hard to obey those we love," pleaded Archie.

No sooner had he finished speaking than Mr. Grant rose hastily from his chair, and taking his cap down from its peg he left the house without uttering a word. Archie was sorely troubled. He would rather that his father had scolded than leave home in that way.

When Archie reached home again late at night his father had not returned, and Archie went to bed with a sad heart. When Mr. Grant at length returned, his patient, loving wife was rejoiced to see that he was quite sober. All the day following he seemed quiet and thoughtful, but not until the children were asleep in bed, did she learn the cause.

Before retiring to rest, Mr. Grant asked for pen and ink and a sheet of note-paper. In answer to her wondering look, he said, "This is Christmas Eve, and I want to make a Christmas card for Archie." Thinking he was to sketch a picture for Archie, Mrs. Grant peeped over her husband's shoulder; and when she saw the words he wrote, her heart was filled with joy.

Christmas morning dawned clear and bright. On getting up Archie was surprised to find that one of his stockings was missing. "I'm certain I left them both together," he said, "whatever has come of it?" He searched round and round, when lo! he espied it hanging from the foot-rail of his iron bed. "Why, it is quite bulky," he exclaimed, in wonder. "Surely mother has done this." When he saw the contents his wonder increased, and his happiness knew no bounds. Inside was a nice warm muffler, and pinned on the outside of it was an envelope addressed to himself in his father's plain handwriting. On the first page were the words, "May you have a happy Christmas and a bright New Year"; while inside Archie read, "I have changed masters; from this day henceforth the Lord Jesus shall be my Governor.—Your loving father."

That Christmas card was the best Archie had ever received, and no one will be astonished to hear that he kept it as long as he lived. It was but the beginning of happier days to both Archie and his parents. How many homes would become the happiest places in the world, if while commemorating the Saviour's birth, people would allow the meek and lowly Jesus to take possession of their hearts, and become the Governor of their lives!

THE CHRISTMAS STORY.

CHILDREN, wake, 'tis Christmas morning,
You have watched the time go past,
Wish'd, and long'd, and waited for it,
Now 'tis really here at last.

"Love, love, love," the bells are calling,
"Peace, peace, peace on earth," they swing;
And they make us feel so happy,
We are glad to hear them ring.

Children, do you know the story
That the bells toll out to-day?
I can see by your bright faces,
"Yes, yes, yes," you seem to say.

"For our darling mother taught us
Long ago, when we were small,
And she tells us very often,
For we love it best of all."

Yes, you know the sweet, sweet story,
And you know the Babe Divine,
Who came down to us at Christmas,
Is you gracious King, and mine.

Let us serve Him, let us love Him,
Let us worship Him to-day;
"Yes, yes, yes, we will," you answer;
"We will worship Him alway."

He has other little children,
Who to Him are just as dear;
But they are so poor and lonely,
And they have no Christmas cheer.

Send them some of your nice presents,
Something off your Christmas-tree;
Spare some toys to make them happy,
As you hope yourselves to be.

Be obedient, meek and gentle,
And though now He reigns above,
He will tenderly receive you;
He will see and know your love.

SPECIAL MISSION SUPPLEMENT

London Poverty.

4.—In Squalid South London.

Among the hurrying hosts who daily throng London Bridge how few know anything of the densely-crowded areas lying behind the busy terminus. Stretching on either hand run labyrinths of narrow courts, gaps, and alleys—some of them the most wretched in the Metropolis, others fairly well kept. All around are springing up lofty blocks, lending a new aspect to the locality, and in most cases affording accommodation immensely superior to the old tenements they have replaced.

My investigations, on this occasion, have been in the Bermondsey district. Along Tooley-street, past lines of great warehouses, and just beyond St. Olave's School one reaches long ranges of Industrial dwellings, well constructed, well conducted, and well tenanted. Some such blocks, however, in the locality have already gained an evil repute by reason of the undisciplined type of the majority of the occupants, who not seldom make night hideous with riot and ribaldry.

Yet further on, under the conductof a London City missionary, I turn into a perplexing maze of by-streets and narrow rows of houses of two or three storeys, let out mostly in single apartments. Going from room to room, we find poverty in various forms everywhere. Here are deaf-and-dumb parents, with seven children possessed of all their senses, but miserably poor. The rent is 3s. 6d. per week. It is hard to earn that and have anything left for food; but it must be done, or out they go; and then, as sore experience has taught them, it would be a hard matter to get another room by reason of infirmity and numerous children.

Two or three doors away is a blind widow, who pays 2s. 6d. for a little back room, and manages somehow, if she can only get a cup of tea and bit of bread.

Next a half-starved woman—with fourteen children; father out of work; and 17s. 6d. rent to pay, for they have the house and let it out. Her report of her lodgers is that all are more or less in a bad way. In one room the whole furniture of the lodger proved to be an empty tea chest turned upside down for a table, an old meat tin and a few rags—not much to comfort the two little girls found in the room. Another came into the house some weeks before (outwardly decent looking), and brought as her whole effects an old chair bedstead.

A few doors further on a poor woman is sitting crying. Last winter she had seven children; now she has none. All have died, and it is said largely from want and defective drainage. A little way off, in Hickman's Folly, we find in house after house indications of want and misery. Here and there we light on saints of God, pressed sometimes, scanty always, but never in actual want.

In some way or other,
The Lord does provide.

Wending our way down a bewildering series of narrow turnings, we reach the riverside, where, among wharfs and tall warehouses, we come on a curious and quaint bit of Old London, in the shape of a few ancient wood-sheathed houses, oddly enough left lingering among works and stores, the aged landlord, I believe, declining to entertain any offer, preferring to keep things as they are and have been. These old houses are crowded by the poor, suiting as they do admirably casual and dock labourers. Many are, however, in distressing straits.

Our day's researches were closed by visiting, in one of the huge blocks, a dear old saint, eighty-three years of age, waiting on the border land for her Father's call home. A sweet, happy, trustful child of God she proved to be, one who gave the visitors much more spiritual cheer than they could bestow. Her life has been one of marvellous discipline and self-sacrifice, but here I may not detail. There are many such, shining as lights in dark places, in the darkest corner of London slums, doing quietly a real work in weakness and poverty for Him they love.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

The Children's Home is the short title for a series of institutions, which, under the fostering care and direction of Rev. Dr. Stephenson, have been instrumental of a large amount of good. Originating with two or three poor lads sheltered by the compassionate young minister in his own house in Lambeth, the Home has grown and developed into seven branches (one being in Canada), and the total number of children actually in residence is over 930. During last year, 217 new inmates were received, and a valuable agency for uplifting servant girls and others from perilous surroundings, and helping them into a path of rectitude and honour, brings the number directly benefited during the year up to 1220.

Of course, such an organisation cannot do its appointed work without the constant support, financially and in other ways, of its friends. In common with other institutions this work has suffered of late by the prevailing depression, and in the latest report we read "the year just closed has been one of the most anxious in the whole history of our work." The income was £2000 below the expenditure, but in response to a vigorous appeal this liability was removed. Naturally the committee, though willing to effect all possible economies, cannot think of relaxing its endeavours. With obvious truth the report says: "All enterprises that aim at the soul's renewal and uplifting have within them Divine life and will grow. Prudence requires that the growth of such a work as this shall not be too rapid. Faith must not be rashness, but courage and faith must respond to the unmistakable indications of Divine blessing or the work will be smitten with paralysis."

The London branch of the Home, in Bonner-road, Bethnal Green, has accommodation for 350 children, and the "family system" of grouping about twenty children in one house with two sisters in charge has long been in force. Dr. Stephenson is just trying a further experiment in this direction by placing thirteen boys in a smaller house in charge of one sister. By this means the children are still better known and personally dealt with by those who have charge of them, when the daily life more nearly accords with that of an ordinary homestead. In connection with the branch there is a Convalescent Home at Alverstoke on the Solent, where young and delicate children are cared for, also a Rest House for Workers needing a few days' relaxation and relief from the confined and constant "duty" of daily routine.

At Edgworth, near Bolton, there is the "Moorland Farm" branch, where farming and dairy produce are successfully carried on, besides the domestic and religious training of 194 children in the various homes picturesquely grouped on the hill-side. A knitting industry among the girls assisted the revenue of this branch last year to the extent of £124, and the trade done in this way has put the Home in direct communication with all parts of the world. A "new departure" is the "Watson Holiday House," opened this summer to receive alternate groups of very poor boys and girls from the crowded centres of population like Manchester, Liverpool, etc., and give them ten days or a fortnight for recuperating exercise, with good food and fresh air.

The Princess Alice Orphanage branch at Birmingham illustrates the fact that the work of the Children's Home is not only of rescue but of prevention, a need scarcely less important than the first. Here are found those who have been suddenly bereft of godly parents, perhaps brought up in earliest days familiar with modest comfort in life; but left before the world without friends or resource. It specially behoves the Christian philanthropist to regard such with tender care and anxious interest, for the sake of the good lives of those "gone before." 121 such children are cared for at this branch, so that, as the report says, the seed sown years ago by God-fearing, child-loving men and women, is "bearing a precious harvest of helpfulness which stanches sorrow, exchanges despair for hope, and brings an environment of happy opportunity to our boys and girls around whom an unnatural gloom had gathered."

A small branch at Ramsey, Isle of Man, contains forty-four, chiefly young children, and a branch for boys at Gravesend, under the Industrial Schools' Act, has 168, of whom 150 have been sent "by magistrate's order," the remainder being "voluntary" cases. Here farming, shoemaking, tailoring, and other very practical trades are acquired.

A large number of the children go to situations in Canada, being distributed to farmers, storekeepers, etc., from the branch of the Home at Hamilton, Ontario. The reputation of "Dr. Stephenson's Home" is deservedly very high amongst the Canadians who desire lads and lasses of character, determination, and sound religious principle. 3664 children have passed through the Home since its foundation, and are to be found in almost every English colony, in every trade and profession, and, with a very few exceptions, they are found everywhere fulfilling an honourable career of usefulness and happiness.

We can scarcely do better in concluding this summary of the scope and aims of this excellent institution, than quote the words of its founder and principal, Dr. Stephenson: "If our friends could but know the children as we do: could hear the artless prattle of the little ones, and watch mind and heart unfolding in the older children: could trace them as we do in their after-life, and mark in each one the wonderful result produced by the giving of a new opportunity and the good use made of it, they would feel there is no Diviner work, perhaps none that comes so near both to the work of Creator and Redeemer, as the work which in the name of our Master Christ, and amid many conscious imperfections, we are doing for the children of England at the Children's Home."

TEACHING OF THE BLIND.

The Home Teaching Society for the Blind maintains fifteen blind teachers, each of whom has a lending library of from 400 to 500 books, in embossed type. The metropolis and suburbs are divided into fifteen districts. All blind adults in that area, who desire it, and some invalid blind children who cannot go to school—over 2000 persons altogether—receive a visit about once a fortnight, either at their own homes, or in workhouses. All who can learn are taught to read Moon or Braille type, by touch, and their books are exchanged regularly.

But the teachers' work does not end here. They also act as Scripture-readers, and often carry the Gospel into homes where no other messenger of Christ can penetrate. This old and well-tried mission should not suffer for want of funds. The secretary is Miss E. Bainbrigge, 47, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W.

THE FEMALE GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

Christian workers of to-day are wisely giving increased attention to preventive agencies, on the principle that it is better to save young people from being swept over a precipice than to stand at the bottom and try to give them surgical aid after they have fallen over. But while this is happily true, rescue work is none the less sorely needed, for the agents of sin are busy, their insidious efforts are but too successful, thousands are sucked under in the awful whirlpools of vice and sin, and hosts of our unhappy sisters are wearily, hopelessly treading—sick at heart and ready to die—the ever downward path of shame and sorrow that ends only in a dishonoured grave. Again and again, true men and women who see these, ask, Can such be saved? Can nothing be done to help them to escape? Yes, they can be saved, as thousands have been saved by devoted servants of God, who have given themselves to this hard and forbidding yet richly fruitful field of service among the lost.

Nearly a century ago, some earnest Christian men, sorrowing over the miserable and hopeless condition of these fallen ones, inaugurated efforts for their rescue, opening homes in Pentonville and Bethnal Green. For many years these were distinct institutions, but in 1888 they united in the Female Guardian Society which has now a fine Training Home, on freehold ground, in Stoke Newington, and a Probational Home in Old Ford-road, Bethnal Green. These Homes are capable of accommodating 100 inmates, and they are generally full.

A visit to these Homes is sufficient to convince anyone how well and carefully they are kept, how admirable the arrangements, how free and happy the life of the inmates—albeit that good order is well maintained; while an examination of the books shows how valuable have been the results in hundreds of young women once "doomed to death," now doing well, serving God, and leading honest and useful lives. The Society has always been a valuable auxiliary to the various Gospel Missions, midnight meetings, and rescue societies in London and the provinces, inasmuch as its doors are ever open to welcome our fallen sisters, to whom the Gospel has been effectually brought, and who would, without such an asylum, be again drawn into the vortex of iniquity. It feeds, clothes, and trains in industrial work all whom it receives, and thus they are afforded an opportunity for a fresh start in life.

More than ten thousand young women have entered and been benefited by these Homes. It is a sad fact that of this number one-third have been orphans, cast upon the world without a friend, many being mere children. They come, moreover, from all parts of the land—very many being country girls lost in London. Inasmuch as not a few have fallen through drink, temperance principles are kept well to the front; but above all reliance is placed on the saving power of the Gospel, and in every possible way it is sought to bring the girls to see the need of personal conversion, and the most encouraging feature of the work is that the majority of those who pass through the Homes prove themselves to be reclaimed by not returning to their former life—a result which places the utility of such effort in the strongest light.

Of course an institution such as this needs support, and indeed has very strong claims for support. As the secretary says: "The willing industry of the inmates, although providing one-third of the expenditure, falls short of the requisite amount by nearly £2000 per annum. The institution can never be self-supporting, as most of the inmates have to be trained to habits of industry before their labour becomes of much value, and many of them enter with impaired constitutions or feeble health, which confines them more or less to the Infirmary of the Home."

We regret, in view of its valuable work and happy results, to find that the Female Guardian Society is seriously suffering from lack of funds. The secretary, Mr. W. E. Page, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N., will be glad to hear from friends interested.

BIBLE WOMEN AND NURSES.

On Monday a most interesting gathering took place, the occasion being the reopening of premises in Parker-street, Holborn, which since 1860 have been used by the London Bible Women and Nurses' Mission as a dormitory; but having been refitted, the place is now a training home for candidates during their period of probation. In the unavoidable absence of Lord Harrowby, president of the Mission, Lord Kinnaird, the treasurer, presided.

The hon. secretary, Mrs. Selfe Leonard gave a striking résumé of the Society's work and expansion from its formation in 1857 by the late Mrs. Ranyard. Beginning in St. Giles', it had extended East and West, and gone to other lands as well. In visiting the homes of the poorest, taking with them lessons of cleanliness and tidiness, reading the Bible, and if possible inducing the inmates to get a copy for themselves, the Bible-women frequently found cases in sore need of nursing. To meet this need, the nursing branch was established in 1868, and now there are 130 Bible women and 96 nurses working in poorest London.

The Parker-street Home is under the charge of a resident lady. Bible women candidates will be lodged and trained, and there is accommodation for nurse probationers, for trained lady nurses, and for ladies desirous of seeing and learning practically the details of the society's work. The expense has been considerable, and some furniture is still required to complete the Home.

Sir William Broadbent gave his hearty testimony to the value of the work done by the district nurses. He had experience of dealing with the poor when they had not the advantage of such help, and therefore knew the enormous value of the services of these nurses. It was a great pleasure to him to see the extension of the society's operations and the splendid organisation. Under such management, and with such care for the efficiency of its agents, a great future lay before the mission.

Dr. Amand Routh, having for a good many years had charge of the maternity department at Charing Cross Hospital, knew well the immense advantage of having such nurses in the homes of the poor ready to carry out doctors' instructions; raising the tone of the patients; improving the appearance of the homes every time she visits the patient; and the result, too, was quite apparent, with the skilled help of these nurses they hardly ever lost a case; but when only a friend or neighbour who knew nothing about nursing was called in they had lost about fifteen per 1,000 cases. The Christian character of the nurses, too, commended itself to him.

Revs. C. H. Simpkinson and John Sharp also testified to the value of the work.

Lord Kinnaird, mentioned the loss a year or two back of one who for many years, had given from £2,000 to £3,000 per annum to the society's funds. He urged friends to come forward and take this donor's place, by giving as they were able.

The Mission works quietly and never issues appeals. The expenditure last year amounted to £19,000, and there was a deficit, as the bank account is overdrawn. The office expenditure is extremely low. The Society's address is 2, Adelphi-terrace, W. C.

WEST LONDON POOR.

Will you allow me to appeal to your readers on behalf of our poor in the West of London? At this season of the year there is always much distress amongst them, and in place of the Christmas cheer that gladdens most homes, it is a time of special need. Almost any gifts will be very gratefully received. Coals, meat, sacks of peas for our soup, potatoes, tea, old clothes.

To add further to the Christmas festivities, we should be very glad to receive old Christmas cards, pictures for the dark rooms, crackers, toys, cakes and sweets, and oranges. Gifts of money are needed all the year round. Parcels and letters should be addressed to Sister Katherine, Craven Hall, Marshall-street, Golden-square, W.

MISS SHARMAN'S ORPHANAGE.

The twenty-ninth report of work in connection with the Orphans' Home, with which the name of Miss Sharman is so honourably connected, opens with a statement of facts and principles. Among the latter are the three rules—no voting, no begging, no debt.

Since May, 1867, 1210 children have been received, some of them in earliest infancy. A large and convenient building has been erected in Austral-street, West-square, S.E., at the cost of £21,500, which accommodates over 200 children, with their matrons and teachers; country branches have been established at Gravesend and Tunbridge Wells; and a special fund formed for necessitous orphans of professional men and others of the educated classes. Next year's report will, it is hoped, record the opening of a small Home at the seaside, for which special contributions have already been given.

During the past twelve months the receipts amounted to £6098, not to mention substantial gifts in kind. In the domestic life of the institution, every endeavour is made to teach the children to be true and good. The report says:—"Our first aim is to train our little ones for Christ, to teach them to love and obey Him; and our next, to give them a bright and sunny childhood, the remembrance and influence of which shall help them to lead right and useful lives, and to delight in making others happy.

"In the course of the year fifty-five children left the Home, one was dismissed for misconduct, two were adopted, one was apprenticed, five were removed to other institutions, thirteen were returned to their relatives; thirty-two girls were sent to service, and one died. Our little Florrie died of rapid consumption, and though her loving heart clung to those dear to her, she quite realised that to depart and be with Christ was far better. We begin the new period with 317 orphans under our care, having received fifty-two new children during the year."

As far as possible those who are waiting for admission are taken in rotation, but in extreme cases exceptions are made. Children who are quite orphans always have the preference; next come cases where a poor widow is left destitute, with a large, young family. "Two lovely, gentle, little sisters, who had evidently known a mother's tender care, came into the Home together. Their father murdered their mother, and then took his own life, and these poor babies saw the whole tragedy. How can we ever do enough to obliterate the past from their little minds, and give them a sweet and happy child life, on which to look back in after years? Two other sisters, one twelve and the other five, came to us from what had been a very happy, good home, but death had taken away the father in the prime of life, and the poor mother, left destitute with a large family, was unable to bear the burden, and became insane."

The Orphanage has country branches, of which, with other details, particulars may be had from Miss Sharman at the London Home.

SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH.

The new report of this work is for the nine months ending October 31 last, during which time the receipts amounted to £572, covering the expenditure with a small balance in hand. Through death and other causes the list of subscribers has been so reduced, that its usefulness may be impaired unless new friends lend a hand. The Society carries the Word of God (in whole or in portions) to places which otherwise would not be reached; its rolls take comfort into many a sick room; its large-print portions and texts, deposited in waiting-rooms, attract the eyes of numbers.

The secretary acknowledges the courtesy and active sympathy which he has received from station-masters and station clerks in reply to his appeals; and volunteers in different parts of the country have undertaken, besides, to visit the railway stations in their neighbourhood and report on the condition of the books. In consequence of the information thus gained, many old and worn-out books have been replaced by new ones, and some have been placed where there were none before. By this means about 500 waiting-rooms have been supplied. Scriptures have also been placed in schools and lodging-houses. Copies of the report may be had from the secretary Mr. W. W. Brown, 65, South-street, Eastbourne.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

Owing to a complete breakdown in my health, I have most reluctantly been obliged to give up the work I loved so well in the Tower Hamlets Mission, and to change my abode from East London to Sussex. It is, therefore, not only a duty, but a sincere pleasure to pen a few lines, expressing my deep appreciation of that one special branch of the Lord's service with which I am so well acquainted. It was a happy nine years of Christian fellowship and friendship with Mr. Charrington, Mr. Kerwin, and all the other dear workers there, for which I shall ever thank God. To have worked and worshipped in connection with the Great Assembly Hall for so long, is a privilege never to be forgotten.

Few who have not seen the work for themselves can have any conception of the network of agencies always going on. To see the hall filled with nearly 5000 persons every Sunday night, with eager listeners drinking in the pure Gospel, is a sight worth journeying miles to witness. I know of nothing so stimulating. The hall is never closed, and there has just recently been completed the 7200th consecutive night of services. How much we have to praise God for in raising up such a mission in the densely-crowded East End!

The life in East London, with its congested population of poverty-stricken and sin-stricken humanity, is like the encroaching and destructive waves of the great ocean! This vast sea of human misery which surges round us, beats against our hearts so continually, that almost insensibly life wears out; and they who stand on the breakwater, with head and heart, with faith and prayer, striving to stem the tide, and save the drowning ones, must in their turn retire from the scene, unfit any longer to carry on the struggle. Thus my turn has come; and now, at a comparative distance, I sit down, not only to thank the many kind friends for the bounteous help they have so constantly sent for God's poor ones, but to beseech a continuance of the same, that the noble mission may be able to meet the certain and numerous needs of this winter, already at the door. As regards the hon. superintendent, Mr. F. N. Charrington, I do not think his most hypercritical observers can possibly accuse him of being prolific in appeals for his work; it is only under hard pressure of empty coffers that he comes before the public; while the gratuitous issue of his little quarterly "Record" is almost his only advertisement.

If I were to sum up the mainspring in action of this mission, according to my nine years' experience, I should say it embodied, in principle and practice, morally, spiritually, and physically, five words of our blessed Master's—

"GIVE YE THEM TO EAT!"

The hungry ones are fed, not spasmodically, "not grudgingly or of necessity," but cheerfully, lovingly, and with the best provisions that funds will permit. They are clothed and warmed, and generally looked after by the many willing workers belonging to the Mission; not least, by Mr. Joseph Clarke, the appointed evangelist, who is untiring in his sympathetic visitations from house to house. Through the unexampled goodness of friends to my own special work last winter, I was enabled to send out 60 tons of coal, at intervals, to some hundreds of the poorest families, and now that I am no longer on the spot to do this, I am hoping this generosity may be repeated and transferred to Mr. Charrington's coal fund. What fire is to the poor no one could realise, who has never known the want of it; and what the dear little children suffer, where there is none, or where a pennyworth at a time is all that can be purchased, can never be described in words. It must be seen to be understood. I would commend the whole of this work to the kindness of my readers, with all its earnest, loving-hearted workers and its countless needs; and I commend to all the Lord's children, the poor ones whom He has left to our care. All letters should be addressed Mr. F. N. Charrington, Great Assembly Hall, Mile-End-road, London, E. ROSE BENN.

The Royal Blind Pension Society is giving charitable aid to 800 needy blind people in all parts of the kingdom. Relying upon voluntary support for our income and having 300 applicants in almost destitute circumstances seeking help from us, we anxiously appeal to those blessed with sight to come to our aid in befriending these poor blind people.—GEORGE POCOCK, Hon. Sec., 235, Southwark Bridge-road, S.E.

THE CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.

So little general advertising is done by this Society that there is a danger of its work being unknown, and its claims ignored, in the distribution of the contributions of the charitable. If, however, a careful consideration were given to the plan and results of its operations, no real friend of children could well withhold some measure of support from it; and thus not only would the committee be relieved of their present anxiety concerning the funds for sustaining the work, but means would be found for much needed extension of it.

The details concerning the children rescued are generally of too painful a character to be fully recorded for general circulation; but for the information of any who would like to peruse them some very interesting particulars have been printed recently, under the title of "More Children Rescued," and will be forwarded upon application to the secretary of the Society. The following are some facts which should be considered by all who are not at present supporters of the work.

The operations of the Society commenced in 1856. The Society has helped in the establishment of many of the institutions for poor children which have been since started. Payments have been made to Homes for the maintenance of poor children in all parts of the Kingdom, amounting to £48,065. 4925 children have been placed in Schools or Homes, 935 have been sent to sea, 183 have been emigrated, 216 boys have been placed in situations, 188 wandering children have been restored to friends, 1,101 children have been removed from evil surroundings, 1,831 children have been otherwise aided.

Last year 338 children were placed in Homes, 30 children were sent to sea, 18 were emigrated, 904 others were befriended in various ways above indicated, an agency with a receiving house was sustained in Manitoba, and payments amounting to £942 were made to Homes for the maintenance of children. All this work was done with an income of only £3205. The following is an illustrative case:

TWO LITTLE WANDERERS.

Not four miles from Hyde Park Corner, William, aged nine, and Louisa, aged thirteen, brother and sister, were seen one afternoon by an officer of the Children's Aid Society. They were poorly clad and had been begging. They were followed and seen to go to some heaps of rubbish and ashes and search them over, as if in hope of discovering some hidden treasure. The Children's Aid Officer took them to a shop, gave them some food, and had them weighed. The little boy weighed 30lb., and the girl 47½lb. The boy was without shoes or stockings, and both the poor children were in a terribly dirty condition. After placing them in a shelter, where they would be properly washed, the officer went to look for the parents, and found them, with two other little children of four and two years of age. The mother had sadly neglected all her children and was punished for her cruelty. William and Louisa are now in nice schools, well cared for, and are being taught to read and write and to be industrious. Above all they are learning something about the love of Jesus Christ, for whose sake the Children's Aid Society officer was sent to search for such wandering lambs of the fold.

Beside the Shaftesbury House Receiving Home in Manitoba, the Society is responsible for the maintenance of:—Seventy-four infants boarded out; two boys' beadles, attending daily at the police courts and elsewhere for befriending children; three rescue officers, who are constantly seeking out poor children from the vilest haunts, and securing their admission into Homes, where they will be protected from evil influences, and kept under proper control till they are eighteen years of age; no other society undertakes this work, and it shows in a period of over ten years 89·7 per cent. known to be doing well; the Grotto Home, to give big lads, too old for admission to ordinary Homes, a last chance and a new start; the Girls' Protective Home, where girls of neglected training, or with unsuitable homes, are prepared for service.

The aid given by the Society to poor children is of a permanent and substantial character. The work is not confined to London, but assists children from all parts of the kingdom.

Further particulars will be found in the annual report, which will be forwarded on application to the Secretary, 32, Charing Cross, London, S.W.

THE STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE.

FOUNDED BY C. H. SPURGEON.

The enormous power of trifles in the aggregate, massed together by a master mind, and set in motion by a devoted band of willing workers, can nowhere be seen to better advantage than in the beautiful group of children's homes founded by the late Mr. Spurgeon. Five hundred children who have no home find here shelter, education, friends, and, in due course, a career opens to them from the orphanage door. More than all, they find here a life-long home in the truest and best sense of the word. These children, 250 boys and 250 girls, who come from every part of the United Kingdom, who are the orphans of representatives of the most varied professions, from mariners and watermen to ministers and missionaries; these children have one thing in common on entering the institution—their extreme need.

It is a noteworthy fact that admittance is gained without votes, the most needy, helpless, and deserving being always selected by the committee. Another point is that the education is absolutely unsectarian—children are received of every denomination; and he would, indeed, be a bigot who could find fault with the admirable training given here, whether religious, moral, intellectual, or physical. The children are thoroughly happy and healthy, and they are free; there are no irksome restrictions, and in their bright faces and merry play it is easy to see that the government they are under is both loving and wise.

With the near approach of Christmas the boys and girls are looking forward, with all the pleasure of hope, to the usual festivities of the season.

The managers cannot afford to draw upon the ordinary income for the extra expense which must be incurred, and they venture once more to ask for special help towards the Christmas fund.

The thought of giving pleasure to 500 children, all of whom are fatherless, and many of whom are motherless also, will enhance the happiness which many hope to enjoy within their own family circle.

An annual income of £12,000 is necessary to maintain this beautiful institution, £10,000 of which has to be made up by means of voluntary contributions, which should be addressed to the treasurer, Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, D.D., care of the secretary, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

This Society, of which Sir George Williams is president, urgently needs, and certainly deserves, better support, for, without disparaging other missions, it would not be easy to find any doing a larger work with as limited an income or attended with greater spiritual blessing.

It missions about thirty ports, sustains nine sailors' rests, bethels, institutes, coffee tavern and sailors' home, besides mission boats. It employs nineteen missionaries, who are aided by over one hundred unpaid workers. It corresponds with sailors in all lands, circulates the Scriptures, tracts, and books in many languages, and affords relief to destitute seamen; yet the annual cost is less than £2300!

The splendid work at the headquarters in Ratcliff Highway would not be dear if it cost that sum. There, during the first week of this year, Rev. G. J. Hill reports that "fifty seamen signed the temperance pledge, nearly twenty of these being also brought to the Lord," and every week others are being influenced in like manner.

Not only at the headquarters, but at all its coast-stations this Society is doing a soul-saving work. Sunday-schools, bands of hope, temperance and open-air work, ships' loan libraries, the regular visitation of sailors' boarding-houses and ships in the docks and rivers, besides many other useful efforts, are successfully carried on.

The Society's Jubilee will be celebrated at Exeter Hall on January 14. Meanwhile, an effort is being made to raise a Jubilee Fund of £5000, to free the Society from debt, and to extend its operations.

Surely the terrible disasters on the deep during the past few days must emphasize the need of a work like this, and should gain for it the prompt and generous support of our readers.

"TO RESCUE AND SAVE."

There is music in the words. They tell of the sinful and shame-stricken brought back to virtue; of the betrayed and deserted befriended and helped; of the tear of the penitent wiped away, and the despairing cry giving place to joy and gladness; of the parent's desolate heart cheered; of young girls saved on the verge of the great moral precipice, a strong protective arm thrown around them, delivered from degradation and terrible surroundings of vice, set free from the snare of the fowler, and after many months of training and care placed in respectable positions.

To those whose whole heart and soul is thrown into the effort of lifting the fallen and saving the endangered, it means heart-aching and brain-fagging work. The whole sympathies and feelings of one's being are brought into play; at one time weeping with those that weep; the next moment stirred to righteous indignation against the villainy of some wrong-doer; or as quickly turned to reason and remonstrate with, or solemnly warn, the wayward, the unruly, the halting or foolish one who seems bent on her own destruction; or again, speaking some word of encouragement to those going forth to service, or giving words of counsel to all such as seek it.

In the midst of this variety the worker must ever remember that he or she stands forth as the servant of God, as the humble and most unworthy representative of the Friend of Sinners, who, while full of the tenderest compassion and pity for the penitent, yet never either made allowance for or dealt lightly with sin, though ever ready to forgive and cleanse.

Rescue workers need much of the spirit of their Divine Master, more perhaps than labourers in other parts of the great harvest field; and we earnestly crave for them the continual prayers of God's people, that the compassion of Christ may fill them, and that their own souls may be kept pure and tender, free from the hardening process which contact with sin in its loathsome forms sometimes produces.

Oh! that we more frequently heard in our public services the prayer for the outcast, the degraded, and the destitute, and for all such as labour amongst them. Surely more sympathy would then be felt, and less often would the question be asked incredulously, "Do you really find any good comes out of it?" or, "Do the girls stand?"

The annals of the Rescue Society, which was, we believe, the first to establish Homes on the family system, and which since the year 1853 has been happily engaged in this blessed work, give an abundant answer to all such questions.

Sixteen thousand eight hundred girls and young women have been received into the Society's Homes, not merely for shelter, but for many months, and in some cases years, of training—16,800 precious souls, for whom Christ died, for the most part self-convicted of sin, have been brought under personal daily Christian instruction and influence, with the result that thousands have been won to paths of virtue and usefulness. Many are now, in the mercy of God, living happy Christian lives, and many have been, better still, gathered into the Home above in the presence of their Lord and Saviour.

The year so nearly at its close finds us with our Homes nearly full, applications for admission increasing, and with the treasury absolutely exhausted. How is the increased expenditure for food, firing, and clothing to be met?

The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair, preaching recently on behalf of the Rescue Society, said:—

"I am sure you all wish to have a share in such delightful, well-tried and blessed Christian work as this. 'There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth more than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance.' Just think that you can by a little sacrifice increase that joy! It is by quietly pressing such individual work as this, not by vast schemes of wholesale regeneration, that we can hope to purify the moral atmosphere of London."

The secretary, Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C., will be glad to hear from, and send a report to, anyone interested in the work, or will gratefully acknowledge any help sent to him. The need is very great and urgent.

FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION.

Thirty years ago the energetic secretary (Mr. John A. Groom) laid the case of the poor cress and flower girls before the Earl of Shaftesbury, who, seeing their forlorn and neglected condition, took up their cause with earnest enthusiasm. As a result arose the extensive work, spiritual and temporal, carried on under the title of this Christian mission.

In those days there were comparatively few of the present agencies devoted to the poor; and none took up the case of these hard-worked, neglected street-sellers, whose calling not only exposed them to temptations of drink, vice, and ruin, but practically shut them out from ministrations of city missionaries because the streets and markets were their home. No picture of heathen darkness could be more distressing than that found to exist among these poor creatures. Summer and winter, markets to attend at 4 to 6 o'clock, the streets to tramp all day (Sabbaths included), far into the night visiting public-houses, theatres, and music-halls, hoping to sell—no wonder in those days the cry of despair was heard that "no man careth for my soul," that many fell and were lost in the vortex of sin. The wonder was that any escaped. The streets, too, were different then, with the professional beggars, the vicious who hired afflicted children for the purpose of alms-seeking, and the worst of characters that infested our streets and made the life of girls the more terrible and dangerous. Such was the case when laid before the Earl, who, with his characteristic energy and devotion, sought to establish a better state of things.

The opening of a Mission Hall near Farringdon Market, the formation of classes for the girls, the Christianising and the humanising of the little ones? made a hopeful start. Much opposition from priests was encountered, for many of these street-sellers were nominally Roman Catholics, and it seemed to be the teaching of that apostate church, "better be lost, than saved through Protestant agency." Yet, gradually, confidence was won; women began also to gather in, Gospel services were held and much appreciated, and many encouraging cases of real conversion followed.

Then arose the question, What was to be done with those brought thus into the fold! The street was no place for them; hence the need of a home, shelter, and training institute where they might be gathered and prepared for the honoured position of domestic service for which then, as now, there was an unlimited demand. Up till now some 1300 young girls have been taken from the dangers of the street, and after training are now filling respectable spheres in life. The winter is a time of deep distress, and ever a source of anxiety to the management, for while summer sunshine may bring flowers and buyers, winter destroys both, and brings ruin upon the vendors.

The necessary outgrowth of such a work reveals the gracious hand of the Lord, and how steadfastly the Earl and the management kept before them the one great purpose of all true Christian work, viz., the salvation of the soul. Now the institution has an early market breakfast-room, where the poor women gather to breakfast and hear the word of the Gospel preached. There is a Home for waif and stray children, and one for the crippled girls, who, because of their deformity, are driven into the streets to sell, other means of livelihood being denied them. Here they are taught some business. There are now 120 in these Homes, where a terrible amount of afflicted childhood is brought before the visitors and council.

Six missionaries and deaconesses constantly visit among the sick, forsaken, and despairing, and many are the scenes of glad hope; of rescue and salvation, they meet to encourage them. Over 500 Gospel services are held each year in the eight London district branches of the Mission, with an attendance of over 30,000; and now there seems no case of affliction or need, however hopeless, that some means are not devised to meet it. No wonder (remembering the rapid growth of London) that the Mission finds it absolutely necessary to annually extend its efforts. Timely aid and practical sympathy should be extended that this old and valuable Christian agency may carry the Gospel of hope to this large class of London street poor.

This is not only the thirtieth year of the Mission's existence, but the jubilee year of its founder, Mr. John A. Groom, who has most devotedly given the best thirty years of his life to this work.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

The "Bridge of Hope" has a very strong claim upon the Christian public, for many reasons.

We help almost all the Missions in the East End of London:—

1. By receiving into our Shelter many of the destitute, yet puzzling, cases which come into the various Mission Halls until their stories have been investigated or employment found.

2. By taking hundreds of poor outcast girls, brought by Deaconesses, Nurses, Bible-women, the Police, Police missionaries, and all kinds of other workers. Many of these we send on from our Refuge to other Homes if health, physique, age, and history render them eligible. If not, we must keep them ourselves, feeding, clothing, and eventually outfitting them, and placing them in some kind of useful service.

3. We help by receiving little girls rescued from fathers who have defiled their sacred name, and are known only to their little daughters as cruel fiends; from mothers who would sell their innocent babes into the deepest hell of degradation, that they might satisfy their craving for drink; and from other associations and influences, which, if the children grew up among them, could only result in lives in prison, and on the streets, and, finally, death in the hospital or workhouse.

We believe in East London this three-fold work is unique. It is this circumstance which enables us so effectually to help, because though each branch is distinct in its working, we can classify and distinguish among the applicants.

Our earnest prayer is, that we may be able to supply exactly this need, and maintain the missionary character of the work.

This we cannot do if we are obliged for want of funds to receive only those who are likely to be hopeful or inexpensive cases. It is the poor girl who has never had a chance or a kind word who needs us most, the child whose physical irritability condemns her to an unloved and embittered life (leading in its natural course to criminality and vice) that we yearn to help.

This is not easy work; it is so difficult and wearing that few can understand how it tries both heart and nerve in workers who seek to train these waifs with conscientious care.

The work is economical. Prisons, workhouses, infirmaries, hospitals, cost the community a great deal more per head than our unobtrusive and cheaply managed Cottage Homes. The time spent in comparing figures is no lost exercise, and may prove most instructive.

It is lastly, and yet first of all, a work for Christ. Nothing but his constraining love would enable my beloved fellow helpers so patiently and persistently, year after year, to let no consideration come between them and the work which is dearer than life.

But the situation is critical. We are needing help more than we ever needed it before. To feed, clothe, and provide for 200 every day of the year, summer and winter alike, is no light matter. We exceed 5000 meals each week, and when the hungry little children's daily breakfasts come on (which we have not yet begun for lack of funds) the number will be considerably augmented. And all this beside the Night Shelter work.

When we think of the work we can do nothing but praise God, for He has so wonderfully helped us and blessed us, and made our house a true "Bridge of Hope" over which thousands have passed to a new and better life. When we think of our needs we can only pray that not one plank will be loosened, or one footway across it narrowed, for there are hundreds still waiting for our succour.

Surely we shall not plead in vain for those for whom Christ died. The question comes home to us with special point just now as we look around on our peaceful Christmas firesides with our own happy children gathering about us, "How much owest thou unto my Lord?"

Mary H. Steer.

St. George's, London, E.

The South London Wesleyan Mission purposes to provide free breakfasts for the starving little children of this poverty-stricken neighbourhood. Last winter we provided nearly 50,000 such breakfasts, and thereby secured access to the hearts of many hundreds of the children and their parents. Unfortunately, our social funds are quite exhausted, and I venture to appeal for help. We want to infuse a little Christmas cheer into the sad lives of those around us.—(Rev.) J. H. Hopkins, 12, Chapel-place, Long lane, S.E.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

IN the 212 missions affiliated to the R.S.U., the full round of work is now in beneficent activity. The children throng the classes; the teachers are sorely taxed, but thankful for the opportunity of pointing the poor little ones to Jesus. Nor is it teaching only. This comes first, but it is not all. Amongst the hosts of auxiliary agencies, there are Bible-classes, prayer meetings, Christian Endeavour, and Christian bands to bring out and train the young converts; gospel and popular services for the adults; temperance effort for old and young; reading-rooms for boys and men; libraries to provide decent literature; tract and book distribution; penny banks and clubs of all useful kinds; crèches for the infants, and mothers' meetings for hard-working women. Then, too, there are the industrial classes of varied character for girls and lads as suited to the peculiarities of the district.

Moreover the sick and dying are visited, the Home Cripples cheered and aided, and the "drifts" sought out. The R.S.U. has now cripple visitors in every part of the metropolis; it has found and registered over 3,000 crippled sufferers, and is seeking to bring some comfort into their dreary lives, while telling of the joy of salvation through Jesus Christ.

These and a host of other efforts are engrossing the energies of local workers, who, in this far-reaching and diversified service, are doing the work of the nation, and ought to be able to reckon on the nation's support. The R.S.U., as representing the Ragged Schools of this vast metropolis, claims the generous aid of all who love the children. Fifty thousand of the poorest boys and girls in this great city are now in these schools receiving Christian care and teaching; learning, many of them, for the first time in their lives, the power of love, the art of obedience, the value of knowledge, the joy and strength of religion. Are these children worth winning? Surely they are. But if the Ragged Schools be suffered to languish for lack of support—who will save these children of the slums? There is no other agency that touches them in any adequate measure. Unquestionably the claims of Ragged Schools are strong and urgent. Surely that will be borne in mind at this season of gifts.

THE WINTER'S WORK.

Moreover, and in addition to all this, winter brings its special necessities. Local workers report distress and destitution through lack of employment, and everywhere the children are the sorest sufferers. Where the breadwinner is idle there is no resource but to pawn what is pawnable, and then to endure as best they may. And they do endure, as a rule, in silence, for it is characteristic of the respectable poor, that they will suffer, but will not beg.

Generally, however, the Ragged School teacher finds out the state of things at home from the children, whose wan, worn, famished faces betray the family secret. This being so, something must be done, and is done, so long as funds permit. Free meals are provided, or in isolated cases tickets for food and coals are given, as circumstances dictate and long experience suggests. But for such relief operations the local workers look for aid to the benevolent fund of the R.S.U. But the pressure on that fund is great, while help comes in slowly. It needs large and liberal replenishment, and needs it now.

Nor is this all. Thousands of these little ones are shivering in thin rags—girls in the most severe weather, with but a single cotton frock, and nothing more; boys in tattered knickers and ancient coats cut down. If only to save life the teachers feel they must clothe these, and for aid they turn to the R.S.U. To meet such pitiful pleas that need—

Boys' suits, jackets, knickers, etc.—Girls' clothes, dresses, petticoats, stockings, etc.—Infants' clothing: —Blankets, rugs, etc., for aged and sick.—Material, calico, flannel, serge, and remnants of all kinds.—Boots! boots! boots!—Also to lighten dull weary hours, and brighten sad little eyes—dolls, scrap-books, and used Christmas cards.

The Ragged School Union feel that these plain facts of actual effort present a plea of peculiar urgency on behalf of this great work in every corner of London.

HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE.

THE committee of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children acted wisely in providing such excellent lantern views of their homes and training ships as are now making known, throughout the United Kingdom, the genuine and noble work so long associated with the honoured name of Lord Shaftesbury. It was our good fortune some time ago to be present at the illustrated lecture now being delivered in London and the provinces on behalf of this Society. By means of specially-prepared views, and a very powerful oxy-hydrogen lantern, there were thrown upon the screen a succession of deeply-interesting pictures. These graphic illustrations enable the audience to form some idea of the horrors of the "Rookery," in St. Giles, half-a-century ago, at the time when that honoured servant of Christ, the late William Williams (the founder of the Refuges), began that devoted life-work amongst poor children which he only relinquished with life itself. For although Mr. Williams handed over the secretarial reins to Mr. H. Bristow Wallen in 1890, he worked assiduously as vice-chairman of the Society up to the time of his deeply-lamented death in January, 1892. When Mr. Williams commenced work in 1843, on behalf of destitute children, the apathy of society in general was nearly as deplorable as the condition of the poor little ones. To have undertaken the gigantic work of saving the children in the very teeth of the cold cynicism which then prevailed, speaks volumes for the indomitable spirit of the man, his unflinching confidence in God, and his firm belief that he had received the call from the Father of the fatherless. His whole-hearted devotion to the work, his burning zeal in the rescue of Christ's lambs, ultimately won for him the sympathy and personal aid of godly men and women; so that the number of inmates was increased, and the famous Refuge in Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, saw the dawn of that development which, by the blessing of God, has continued until there are eight Homes on shore, and two training ships on the River Thames.

Briefly stated, these admirable institutions provide accommodation for 1000 children, and this number would be speedily attained if the Society received a prompt and generous response to its present urgent appeal. Surely this response will be forthcoming when it is known that there is room in the Homes for the sad cases awaiting admission! The work is quite dependent upon voluntary contributions. It would well repay any who are interested in practical philanthropy, to pay a visit to these branches of the National Refuges. The work is genuine and thorough. This is at once made manifest by the appearance of the children themselves. Some of our readers can, perhaps, recall the time, not many years back, when the late Earl of Shaftesbury loved to preside at the Exeter Hall gathering of the children and sailor-boys of the National Refuges. With what soul-stirring eloquence he would plead their cause! With what tenderness and pathos he would turn towards the orchestra of smiling, chubby faces, and invoke the Divine blessing on those dear young lives, snatched, as it were, as brands from the burning!

But the powerful pleading of Lord Shaftesbury has for several years been hushed in the silence of death; and the beloved founder, William Williams, has also been called to his heavenly home. Old and staunch supporters of the Refuges have also, one by one, been called away; and the Society has to face a changed condition of things—a perplexing multiplicity of societies, and a benevolent public wearied with circulars by every post. Under these circumstances it is to be hoped that success may attend the urgent appeal made by the National Refuges that the work so signally blessed by God during the past fifty-two years may continue to receive the staunch support of His people. The religious character of the work is as unmistakable as it is unsectarian. The committee are scrupulously careful that every boy and girl under their care shall have the benefit of thoroughly Christian training and influence, as well as being taught a useful trade or occupation. Their aim is to send out into the world Christian tailors, Christian shoemakers, Christian carpenters, Christian farmers, Christian domestic servants, and Christian sailors. We, therefore, trust that a hearty response will be made to this appeal, and liberal contributions forwarded to the secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, at the Society's headquarters, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, London, W.C., or to Mr. Henry G. Copeland, Finance and Deputation Secretary, at the same address.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

EIGHTY-NINE years ago this excellent Society was instituted for the purpose of assisting the aged Christian poor of both sexes, and of every Protestant denomination.

Like so many other institutions, it originated through that revival of the spiritual life of the churches in the latter part of the last century, which was, under the Divine blessing, so largely the result of the preaching of George Whitefield and others.

The first year's operations resulted in an income of £18 6s. 3d., distributed among the three pensioners then upon its books. In the year 1857 there were 432 pensioners, and the number has steadily increased, so that at the present time there are 1,350 receiving pensions amounting to upwards of £9,000 per annum; 993 are upwards of seventy years of age, and of this number 274 are more than eighty, and fifteen are over ninety.

Aged pilgrims such as these, associated with various denominations of Christians, constitute the class eligible for the help of the Society. Their busy day of life is over, the sunshine and the shade, which alternately marked its path, have alike disappeared, and the soft tints of evening gather over the sky. Life's sunset hour, its twilight season, have arrived, and the dim eye, the silvered lock, and the feeble step, indicate that the special and tender care and help needed by old age must be supplied.

Another feature of the work is the four homes at Hornsey Rise, Camberwell, Stamford-hill, and Brighton. In these buildings 180 of the pensioners find peaceful dwellings in the evening of their days. This branch requires £1800 per annum for maintaining the homes and the funds for providing medical attendance, nurses, coals, etc., for the infirm inmates.

The committee endeavour to make these asylums "homes" in every sense of the word. A touching instance of the feeling with which many of the inmates regard them may be interesting. An old gentleman, who had formerly been a merchant, and a subscriber to the Society, became, through reverses in business, a pensioner and inmate of the Camberwell Asylum, where he lived for many years greatly respected. He was seized with illness when visiting some of his relations, and they wished him to remain with them. "No," he said, "I must go home to die," and accordingly he was conveyed to the asylum, where he finished his course with joy.

A bright and cheerful Christian dwells in another asylum. She has been a widow for many years, and has had severe trials. She says, with a curious mixture of metaphor:—"My husband was removed in the strength of his manhood, and I am still a creaking gate, but the Master will cut down the corn as soon as it is ripe."

The medals on the breast of a veteran in another asylum indicate that he served his country at Balaclava and on other battlefields. Subsequently, he became servant to a late eminent ambassador, and has seen much of men and things. His intelligent and interesting narratives vividly illustrate the power of prayer, to which he gratefully declares his life a standing testimony.

The late Earl of Shaftesbury, when presiding at the annual meeting of 1883, said:—"This Institution, apart from the benefit and relief it gives, is a great moral institution, and is set to create in men's hearts and minds a feeling of reverence which is necessary in things moral, political, and religious. Old people are apt to be regarded as burdens, whereas it should be a joy and a privilege to minister to them. For this reason I specially commend the charity to young people."

Full particulars of the work of the Society will be gladly supplied by the secretary, at the office, 83, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.—The work of this institution is sympathetically and carefully described in the current issue of "Baby," the mother's magazine. Photographs are given of Mrs. Hilton, and of a group of children at the Feltham Home.

THE GEORGE YARD MISSIONS.

"George Yard" and its director, the venerable George Holland, need no introduction to the readers of The Christian. Many, however, may have heard of his work, without any adequate idea of its character, extent, and wondrous issues.

It is in Whitechapel. It has recently gained a frontage to the High-street, but Shaftesbury House and the Mission buildings are hidden behind in a maze of narrow courts and alleys running back to Spitalfields. Here a large work is going on, including thirty-five distinct agencies, touching all ages and classes of the poor, from infants in arms (who come to the crèche) to a centenarian, who, if spared to February 28 next, will be 103 years of age. Hoary-headed "Dad" is a recent triumph of grace. Having spent a century in the service of the devil—a willing and open sinner—he was converted at the Mission when he had passed his 100th birthday.

Mr. Holland began his labours over forty years ago, with rough boys, and still the work at George Yard is largely among the children, who come from the poorest homes and lodging-houses and throng the classes and day-school. God has greatly blessed the labours of the teachers, and many of the children are truly converted and useful home missionaries. Industrial classes, teaching boys and girls useful arts and trades, are carried on with increasing usefulness. Numerous evening classes and services are also held.

No really hungry child is permitted to be without food if the case is made known. Sometimes, when the weather is very cold, it is necessary to provide food for more than 300, who are fed with good soup and bread. At other times breakfasts and teas are provided. The cases are all known to the teachers, and the children are under visitation. It would be impossible to say how much sickness has thus been averted, how many young lives have been saved, how much crime has been prevented, and how many poor boys and girls have been delivered from wasting disease and early death.

It is often very painful to notice how badly the poorest children are clothed: in winter the wind finds its way through old ragged garments quite insufficient to keep the body warm, and their shoes do not protect them from the weather, old and worn out, their feet are cold and wet, and thus many poor boys and girls drift into serious illness.

The Infants' Nursery or Crèche is highly valued and nearly always full. Some of the little ones to be found therein are homeless and maintained wholly by the Mission.

Then, among the young people valuable work is being done, both for the working girls, who find in Kinnaird Room, a delightful evening resort; and also among the young men. The Bible classes, too, are being greatly blessed.

Nor are the adults forgotten. The mission services are crowded by the poor. The Bible-class for men is a very remarkable sight, as also the two large mothers' meetings.

Among other branches of deep interest are the College Homes at Shirley (built by Louisa Lady Ashburton) to which thousands of the very poor, in sore need of a change, have been sent; the Mary Baring Nest for little ones in weak health, half starved, ill-clad, and like to die. To hundreds these have been an untold boon, saving both lives and precious souls. H.R.H. the Duchess of Teck has kindly invited women, having two, fortnight by fortnight, all the season, cared for at her place and at her cost—making herself, moreover, personally familiar with each poor guest.

Nonington Hall, another valuable branch, is a training Home for girls, who are taken from evil surroundings and fitted for domestic service. Already the results have exceeded expectations, and we have to praise God for the lives made happy in this Home.

For this far-reaching work, of which we have but touched the outline, there is a great need for workers—many workers. Mr. Holland is grateful to the Lord for the devoted helpers sent (from peeresses down to work-girls), but the field is not fully supplied. Many Christian ladies and gentlemen might surely come and give an hour or two on week evenings.

Large supplies of clothing and books for shivering, shoeless children, are asked for, it will be remembered that the demands in such a mission are very great. If friends will but come and see the work, there is no doubt but they will be led to supply everything necessary. Visitors will be welcomed by Mr. George Holland, George Yard, 87, High-street, Whitechapel, E.

A Visitor.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

How can I plead for them? What can I say so that for the Master's sake, if for no other reason, the reader will be constrained to help them?

Think of the needs of those who are helped by these Homes! There is first that large class which through domestic affliction, or worse, are friendless, homeless, and destitute. Here are two who have been brought to our notice this week. They are step-sisters. When still quite young, they lost both father and mother, and then began the awful "struggle for existence." They have no relatives living, and therefore have clung to each other doing daily work or any odd jobs for a living; at last they went to the Union. A Christian lady wrote to us on their behalf, and by the time this is in print, I hope that both the girls will be safely sheltered in our Homes. But what would befal these girls if there were no Homes to receive them! Ruin, utter ruin, of both body and soul, would in all probability be the end! Are all the cases of a similar nature? Of course not; they vary as do the human countenance; but inasmuch as in this department of the work we deal with respectable friendless girls and young women in distress and moral danger, there is the same need of a ready hand to help them all, however much they may otherwise differ in their outward surroundings.

Very different are the cases of these two girls to the following, which will illustrate the rescue branch of the work. One of the most horribly revolting cases of parental depravity I have met with for a long time was brought to my notice within the last fortnight by a Christian banker in the City of London. In the town where he resides there lived a man, his wife, and eight children. The wife is in an asylum, while the father has borne a bad character for years. One child, a girl not sixteen years of age was criminally assaulted by a scoundrel who fled from justice, but to secure his arrest if possible a warrant was obtained against him. In giving evidence it was discovered that her own father had also been actually guilty of misconduct with her, and he is now undergoing a long term of imprisonment for his iniquity. The home is broken up, and the younger children placed in the Union, while this poor unfortunate child (far more sinned against than sinning), is under Christian influence and training in a Home.

There is as much variety in the cases admitted to the Rescue Homes as to the Preventive Homes; but they are all alike in the fact of betrayal and desertion with the subsequent remorse which they all feel at times, although they may plunge headlong into sinful excesses of all kinds, and try to drown conscience in drink. But there is mercy and salvation for them in Jesus Christ, and it is our constant aim to lead them to Him whose feet were once washed with the tears and wiped with the hairs of the head of one of themselves.

These Homes have assisted nearly 40,000 young women and girls to make a fresh start, in life, but eternity alone will reveal what untold blessing has resulted from the work of this mission of mercy. Two hundred and forty inmates are fed, clothed, housed, and instructed. The reader will therefore not be surprised to hear that we want money. £350 is now needed before the end of the year. It is a large sum to us, but it is, comparatively, a very small sum to many wealthy Christian men and women, who, with a few strokes of the pen, could wipe it completely out. We shall be thankful for the smallest help, and plead with you to give as the Lord hath prospered you.

William J. Taylor.

ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS.—May I bring to your notice the pressing needs of this work among our soldiers? The "Short Service Act" practically results in the flooding of our towns and villages with young men about twenty-five years of age, who have been discharged to their homes after a few years in the army. To get hold of these while in the service, and bring them to a "saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ" we send our readers among them, so that when they leave they may be a blessing to their country, instead of a blight to all around by profligate lives.

G. Philips (Colonel), Secretary.

WOMAN'S MISSION TO WOMEN.

A FEW FACTS.

The chief object of the Female Mission to the Fallen is to send out missionaries who will "go after that which is lost," and bring the wanderer back, thus carrying out in all its fulness the spirit of the Gospel. There are now twenty-one missionaries visiting the streets at night, distributing tracts. On each tract is an affectionate invitation to call upon the missionary, as a friend willing to advise and help, and by this means many an erring young woman has been brought under Christian influence.

Female missionaries only are employed in the work, it being the opinion of the committee, formed after mature consideration, and confirmed by long experience, that no efforts on behalf of fallen women are so successful as those which are made by their own sex. A woman is better able to enter into a woman's feelings, to sympathise with her, to draw from her her tale of sorrow, and to give to her such advice as will be most helpful and seasonable.

Each missionary has a certain district allotted to her, to which her efforts are more particularly directed. About 1000 young women from all parts of the kingdom are annually dealt with, and mission-houses, each with a staff of workers, are now established in the north, south, east, and west of London. At these houses immediate temporary shelter can be given, while friends are being communicated with, or other arrangements are being made for the future training and welfare of any who are desirous to turn from their evil life.

The real character of the work will best be understood by reading the reports written by the missionaries in the different districts; each one tells a most pathetic story. We can only give a very brief extract from the report of the lady in charge of the mission-house in the East of London, who writes:

"Another year has rolled by, and an account of our stewardship is again looked for. We have no new, great, or startling event to recount, only the old story of sin, sorrow, and suffering; and this will be the case as long as 'men' are what they are, and as long as public opinion is not more strongly brought to bear upon them in condemnation of their conduct; till this is done the need of our society to rescue these poor women is palpable. We are thankful to be able to state that repentance for the past, and hope for the future, has been kindled in many a young girl's heart through this instrumentality."

Persevering effort on the part of the worker has often been rewarded by deep gratitude and true affection, as the following letter from a girl in a Home will testify:

"Dear Matron,—I do thank you so much for the kind message you sent me, but I do wish you would come next time, I do so long to see you. I have been here nearly four months, but it does not seem so long. I pray earnestly that I may finish my time and be respectable once again. I must and will be content to wait. I try to please, but I fail sometimes.

"When my time is up I shall feel very unwilling to leave, I know. I will try my utmost to turn out a credit after all my misdoings and downfalls. Trusting you are quite well,

"I remain your humble servant, ——"

For thirty-seven years the Mission has been gradually and successfully extended, and the support given to it has increased in proportion, but the total receipts for the past year were the smallest yearly income for the past twenty years.

No reduction has yet been made in the staff of missionaries, and it would be most deplorable if the work were in any direction to be diminished; but this course can only be averted by those who value the work of this Mission at once rallying to its support.

The annual report, containing interesting details of the work, will be sent on application to the secretary, Mr. A. J. S. Maddison, at 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

BIBLE CARRIAGE WORK.—Within the past few weeks Mr. Northcote Willy has been spreading the Gospel in and near Sheffield. At present he is labouring at Wombwell; and intends carrying on the carriage work throughout the winter.

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

ANNUALLY at this season, Miss Macpherson sends out in letter-form the record of the year's work and her balance-sheet. After acknowledging the great goodness of God, our sister writes:—"Our special ever-deepening interest is the children who after their period of training in the Hackney Home, are now growing to manhood and womanhood in Canada. Their own quarterly magazine, "Home News," has put them in touch with the great need of the heathen world. Among themselves the young men have formed a Foreign Missionary Association, and have commenced supporting their representative in South Africa. Whilst doing this, several of them have consulted us as to their need of training and testing, in order to fit them in due time to go forth as industrial missionaries."

The reports of the visitors in Canada are spoken of as most encouraging—children in all parts of the Dominion being indicated as "doing remarkably well," gaining the love and esteem of master and mistress, and leading consistent useful lives.

THE HOME MISSION WORK.

Reverting to the Home Work, the widows receive first attention:—"Ever since the year 1866, when the great wave of sorrow, through the scourge of cholera, swept over the East of London, the aged lonely widows have been our peculiar care, and to the praise of our covenant-keeping God, who has said, 'Let thy widows trust in Me,' and to us, 'Visit the widows in their affliction,' we are able to testify, that every Monday their pittance (sixpence for sewing), and the means for their free tea, have never been wanting; it seems a sacred fund, like the widow's oil in olden times, as it was poured out into the vessel it was replenished. Our nurse is their special comfort. When medicines no longer have power, the carefully-prepared nourishment soothes many an aged conqueror nearing her everlasting home. They cheer us amid many a trial, for theirs is a very real faith, trusting Jesus when the cupboard is empty, and clothing threadbare."

"Bird Fair" is referred to with much thankfulness.

The patient aggressive work carried on by the colporteur with his Bible barrow continues to be greatly blessed: while the nursing of the sick has afforded constant opportunity of carrying the sweetness of the Gospel into darkened homes.

Interesting details are given of the work among young women. Some twenty work-rooms are visited weekly, the Gospel is spoken, and young women not a few have been won for Christ. "One of the happiest times with the girls is their Saturday evening prayer-meeting, when their cheerful sitting-room is well filled with those who have met for a time of mutual help and prayer. One who supports an aged aunt and a delicate sister said to us one evening that the week before she had spent every penny on immediate necessaries; when the thought came, 'If I get no work the next few days, what will become of me?' she said, 'I turned to my Bible, and asked our Father for a word of comfort, and I opened on "Let not your heart be troubled," so I just believed it, and I have had plenty of work, though others in the same room were without.'

"The Young Men's Evening School has been carried on during nine months of the year, having been attended by those who were desirous, after the day's toil, of improving their education. During the last half-hour each class gathers around God's Word for a brief Gospel talk; we seek to strengthen the young converts, and lead the thoughtless to decision."

The Bible Flower Mission and Railway Gatekeepers' Mission are also well reported. Miss Macpherson concludes thus:—"We are all the year round telling the old, old story, of Jesus and his love, in hospitals, and in homes of the poor, in factories and model dwellings, in schools and classes, in courts and alleys, in daily visitation among our sick and aged and young—giving relief by food and firing, especially to the household of faith."

The Clapton Mission gave last winter 40,000 free breakfasts to poor children, 10,000 dinners to the unemployed; 11,600 quarts of soup were supplied by the soup kitchen; the medical mission assisted 9000 cases; 12,000 articles of clothing were distributed to the needy, and 1500 persons were supplied with Christmas gifts. We urgently need funds to enable us to assist the necessitous and deserving this Christmas.—Rev. THOMAS JACKSON, 8, Rushmore-road, Clapton, N.E.

THE HAVEN, SOUTHWARK.

IN a narrow street turning off the Borough-road stands a door ever open to the wayward wanderer, the remorseful sinner, the distracted and tempted girl. Outwardly, the door, with its common wooden staircase, is so modest that not one in a hundred hurrying past would notice it at all; but far and near its existence is known amongst those who need such aid, and many find their way thither.

Nor does the external aspect belie that within. It is only an old warehouse transformed into a Home, neat and clean, but singularly plain and unpretending. Yet in this quiet corner a grand work is being done by two Mildmay deaconesses. Some nine years ago a little mission was started in connection with Rev. Burman Cassin's work, in a humble loft. The deaconesses soon discovered the pitiful condition of things in the courts and alleys round the Old Marshalsea. Sad cases of heart-broken and betrayed girls came before them. Many seemed hopelessly longing for some way of escape. At length they felt compelled to extend a helping hand to one. This led to others, until they found themselves doing a work of which they had never dreamt, and doing it simply by faith in God.

A few days ago I visited this haven of refuge, and saw something of the Home and its inmates, and heard from the faithful deaconesses stories of rescue and deliverance. Many in the Home are cases of real rescue from shame and misery, police-court cases, victims of intemperance, deserted wives, and helpless little waifs. Some have been dragged out of the Thames, one had taken poison. Many have to be nursed and clothed as well as sheltered. Two now in the Haven were on Piccadilly, where they were touched by a word spoken in season, and found their way to this quiet retreat. Some are from low lodging-houses, others are country girls, betrayed and flung off like a broken toy.

These need personal, wise, patient dealing—each in her own way. Oft it is long, trying, and heart-rending, as again and again it seems a failure. One who lately ran off (for they are not prisoners) found the refrain of a Gospel hymn ringing in her ear. She sought to plunge deeper into sin, to forget it all; but at Charing Cross a boy passed whistling this very air; and God used the boy's heedless whistle to touch her and send her back repentant and humbled. As she described it—"Something seemed pushing me all the way."

Of those at present in the Haven it may be premature to speak; but of the hundreds who have passed through, glorious tidings are told. Many, once among the vilest, are now leading godly lives; while some are devoted workers for Christ.

Besides the original "Haven," there is, a little way off, another house, taken later on, and now used chiefly as a preventive and training Home, for many are found and rescued just in time. The two Homes have room for about twenty; any over this number are sent elsewhere. Amongst these two deaconesses (one being one of the original two) voluntarily reside, sacrificing, with true missionary heroism, home and comfort for their lost sisters.

In the adjoining humble mission-hall a good work is carried on by young men from Rev. F. B. Meyer's Missionary Training Home. This acts and re-acts on the rescue work. The inmates help heartily in the services, and not a few have themselves been helped thereby.

Altogether a delightful and resultful work is going on at the Haven. It is within easy reach of London Bridge, and will well repay a visit. It is one of the Mildmay missions, and supported from the Conference Hall; but the deaconess in charge, 60, Trinity-square, S.E., would be glad to hear from friends interested. There is need of help, for the work is great; and at present there is peculiar need for clothing of every description. PEARL FISHER.

Bow Common.—Last year we gave 255 poor and deserving families a substantial dinner in their own homes on Christmas Day. We want to repeat this effort again. Every case is well known and investigated by our workers. Many of those we shall help are out of employment through no fault of their own, and some are widows and destitute persons. Many who "exist" on a miserable parish pittance will have the luxury of a plentiful meal on this day.—T. J. HAZZARD, 52, Addington-road, Bow, E.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

To "save the children of the needy" in the great seaport of Liverpool and other parts has been the work of the Sheltering Home in Myrtle-street for last twenty-two years. In no town is there to be seen a greater amount of child misery and destitution.

Mrs. Birt and her committee laid hold of one great principle for the improvement of the city slums when they devoted their energies to the children, and decided to save the coming generation rather than lose time and effort on the broken down and vicious adults.

They demonstrated another great principle when they resolved that their energies should be exerted in the field of

YOUTHFUL EMIGRATION TO CANADA.

The emigration of over 3000 boys and girls from Liverpool has proved wonderfully successful owing to the care with which it has been undertaken.

To ensure this success two conditions are necessary: (a) Careful preparatory training.—Individual attention is given to each child, classes for laundry work, cookery, sewing are held for girls, instruction in stable work and milking is given to boys, in addition to ordinary school subjects and a thorough religious training. Their health is also carefully watched, and none emigrated who are not sound in body and mind. (b) Supervision in Canada.—This keeps the children in touch with the home influence, watches over the interests of the children, and allays grievances between guardian and child.

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES.

One boy has worked his way up until he could attend a Theological College in Canada, and has this summer passed his examination with honours, and is now Rev. Thomas B——. Nothing was before this lad and his sister in England but the workhouse, where his father died.

The persevering brother not only paid his own college fees, but also paid for his sister's training as a school teacher.

Twenty-three have married this year respectably many of them very well. George —— married his employer's daughter; she had 7000dols. on her wedding-day, and they will inherit a fine model farm. Bessie —— married a young farmer, whose property is worth 8000 dollars. Edith —— married a young farmer, and came to England for her wedding trip. These are not a few choice instances, for ninety-eight out of every one hundred have done well. Another good work carried on is a class of 230 poor widows who meet to sew once a week, and receive sixpence each and a good meal. Bright speaking from the Word and singing cheers them, and with sympathy they go away to bear the burdens of a life, poor, lonely, and aged with braver spirit.

For fifteen years past a special effort has been made at Christmastide to bring a little of the joy and abundance of the season into the lives of the very poorest and most destitute of the little ones of Liverpool.

Five thousand of these are entertained by Mrs. Birt and her friends at a "Robins' Christmas Dinner" in St. George's Hall, which is considered the largest and finest public hall in the kingdom.

The children fill the body of the hall twice, 2500 in the morning, and an equal number in the afternoon. The little guests enjoy a good meal, and have plenty to carry home to share with "mother" and the younger ones. They delight in the strains of the great organ and the popular airs played by the City Police Band, who give their services.

It is a touching and solemn sight to view this mass of child-life, which is being "dragged up," rather than growing, among the sunken tenth of the city.

One would be glad to see them all gathered safely into the sheltering arms of the Home, and know that they were to have the advantages of a clean start in the New Land.

Help for these three branches of Mrs. Birt's work is urgently needed this winter, the institution having lost over thirty good subscribers by death during the past year.

Contributions may be sent to the chairman, Mr. S. Williamson, to the hon. treasurer, Mr. J. J. Kenner, or to the secretary and superintendent, Mrs. Birt, at the Homes.

THE "KING EDWARD" JUBILEE.

Fifty years ago, on a dismal night in November, Lord Shaftesbury (then Lord Ashley) found his way into a narrow back street in Spitalfields to open a Ragged School in an old stable. The work thus begun among the wretched and forsaken children of the district has developed into the extensive buildings known as King Edward Institute Ragged Schools and Mission in Albert-street, and on the original site in King Edward-street. Looking back on these early days, and contrasting them with the present proportions of the work, as revealed in the report presented last week at the jubilee meeting, one cannot fail to trace the finger of God in the remarkable development which has taken place. In due time the stable was rebuilt, then schools were erected in Albert-street, then in 1853 large new buildings were put up in King Edward-street, to which later additions have been made. Nor is it mere bricks and mortar—the whole is a perfect hive of activity and useful service. It is interesting to note that the present superintendent, Mr. Charles Montague, has been through it all from first to last, beginning in the original stable as a scholar, and now, since 1864, full and responsible hon. superintendent. His personality has stamped itself on all departments of the work.

The large hall in Albert-street, Hanbury-street, was densely crowded on Tuesday week, the majority of those present being "children of the schools," though now sober, well-doing fathers and mothers. The Right Hon. Evelyn Ashley, P.C. (eldest surviving son of Earl Shaftesbury), presided, and showed himself, in his opening words, thoroughly in sympathy with the work to which his father gave his life.

Mr. Charles Montague read the report, which began by giving some account of the origin fifty years ago, and passed on to speak of the present extent of the mission, with forty distinct agencies directly or indirectly doing the Master's work among the poor. First come the children, of whom there are 1600 in the Sunday-schools. Large as the buildings seem, all available space is occupied. Many, especially among the elder scholars, give evidence of a saving change; and most of the teachers were themselves converted in the schools. Then there are Bible-classes, children's services, bands of hope, industrial, mechanical, and drawing classes for the boys; and sewing, cookery, and dressmaking classes for the girls. As to the adults, there are largely-attended mission services, two mothers' meetings with 620 members, and a working men's Bible-class, libraries, reading-rooms, etc. House-to-house visitation is carried on by a devoted nurse, a missionary, and hosts of voluntary workers. Relief is given on the most careful principle, every case being investigated. Free meals are given to starving little ones three times weekly, while 600 children were sent last summer to the country or seaside. Such is the merest outline of a whole circle of operations (to quote Earl Shaftesbury's words) "to save them from the miseries and sin in which their forefathers have been plunged."

Rev. John Kennedy, D.D., who had been associated with King Edward-street almost from the start, recalled early beginnings, and, after tracing in happy fashion the remarkable growth, added—we have here a fresh proof that good work begun in the right spirit, however feeble, will not lack the Divine blessing. Fifty years ago the West-end was scarcely conscious of the existence of the East-end: now all is changed and the one stretches out a hand to the other.

A glowing speech, full of Welsh fire, came next from Rev. Thomas Evans, of Victoria Park. The subsequent speakers included Mr. H. R. Williams, Rev. Bevill Allen, Messrs. George Holland, George Nokes, and John Kirk; while Lady Alice Ashley kindly distributed a large number of prizes for good conduct and steadiness in employment.

WORK IN THE NEW CUT, LAMBETH.

The brothers Young, of the Working Men's Mission, New Cut, have resumed their winter's work among the destitute in S.E. London. There is a good deal of truth in the statement of The St. James's Gazette a year ago:—"Southwark is not the 'East End,' and, therefore, not fashionable as a field for philanthropy, but if anyone wants to do good work in the poorest part of London, it is ready to his hand."

Arriving at the Mission Hall, a large comfortable building in Collingwood-street, we found a number of poor men and women, whose faces depicted tales of sorrow and hardship, comfortably seated, each with a good allowance of soup and bread. On the next floor the same fare was provided for over 150 board-school children, who, if not cared for in this way, would have to return dinnerless. Only needy cases are met, it being the desire of the superintendent to avoid pauperising the people. From October, 1894, to April, 1895, 170,000 dinners were supplied to the poor and starving, and nearly one thousand destitute families were relieved. Independent of the soup kitchen there is a constant relief of needy cases. It can truly be said of this Mission, "The poor ye have always with you."

The story of the rise and progress of this work is but another instance of what can be done by real heart work for God. Twenty years ago there lived in New Cut a family of the Youngs—the parents, four sons, and a daughter; but as with many homes in that neighbourhood the curse of drink played much havoc in it. Tom, one of the sons, who had just forsaken the shoe-black box for a more arduous calling, was brought to the Lord, and then set his heart upon the conversion of his father, mother, brothers and sister. One by one they were brought into the fold, and they became the nucleus of the Working Men's Mission.

The late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon writing of this work says: "The work done by our gracious God, through the brothers Young and their warm-hearted friends, is one that causes me great joy. Theirs has been a real Working Men's Mission, and it has actually reached the persons aimed at; indeed, it sprang up amongst working people...It is with particular pleasure that I commend the work in Collingwood-street, New Cut, to the generous help of all Christian people."

The superintendent, Mr. Thos. Young, of 33, Nelson-square, Blackfriars road, S.E., will be glad to forward report upon application.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

The director records most encouraging success. The weekly reunions, which commenced in October, have been delightful gatherings.

The attendance has increased steadily week by week, and the attention paid has been all we could wish. Far better than all this, there has been a marked improvement in the lives of many who attend.

Several have taken to regular attendance at Divine worship. One says she has now begun to pray, "to really pray, you know." Another asked the gift of a Bible, that she might continue private reading when on tour.

These and other indications of the working of God's Spirit are the more encouraging when we bear in mind the too generally frivolous character of their lives.

Will Christians pray that those who are striving to lead a new and better life may be kept by Divine power, and enabled to continue faithful?

We should be glad of a few more lady letter-writers. The work of the Letter Mission is encouraging in the extreme, but several new members are still without correspondents.

Has any friend a piano for which he or she has little use, which we could put in our dining hall, for use in our weekly meetings?

Alfred B. Harding, Director.
Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

THE LONDON AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY is in its 70th year, and the latest report shows that nearly 1300 old Christians have been helped in their declining years by small pensions, gifts of coal, groceries, &c., some receiving this help for twenty years. All subscriptions and donations are devoted to the actual benefit of the pensioners, many of whom are ninety years old. The society is not so widely known and heartily supported as it deserves to be. Its secretary is Colonel Hamilton Northcote, 32, Sackville-street, W.

CHRISTMAS APPEALS.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged Schools and Mission appeals for aid in giving Christmas help to the poor.—G. Kirk, Secretary, 1a, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Millwall.—The pastor of the Congregational Church wants to make Christmas a bright and cheerful time to the poor of the district.—W. J. Temple, West Ferry-road, E.

Surrey-square Mission.—To cheer the hearts and homes of our poorer friends by giving them a parcel and some firing.—C. A. Pavey, 13, Pepler-road, Old Kent-road, S.E.

Mr. Thomas Richardson, of Rotherhithe Free Church, asks help to afford relief and give Christmas aid to the destitute in this desperately poor district.—Address, 48, Lower-road, S.E.

Newtown, Upper Norwood.—Pastor E. S. Neale asks help in giving to the very poor coals, food, and a little Christmas cheer.—5, Maidstone Villa, Knight's Hill, West Norwood, S.E.

Poor Boys in Deptford.—Help wanted to give these a good hot dinner on Christmas Day; also to help a few poor Christian families with coals, parcels of meat, and grocery.—H. A. Punnett, Cotton-road, Potters Bar.

The Salvation Army proposes as usual to give as many thousands of homeless and destitute men as possible (who shelter under our roof) a good meal at Christmas. We ask all to give liberally as a thankoffering unto the Lord.—E. Cadman, 272, Whitechapel-road, E.

Chelsea Children's Mission.—To gladden poor children with a Christmas dinner, also a tea and warm clothing. The numbers having increased this year, the demand on our slender funds will therefore be greater than former years.—C. H. Connor, 25, Church-street, Chelsea, S.W.

John-street, Chapel, W.C., for providing the deserving poor of this neighbourhood with the necessaries for a Christmas dinner at their own homes. Last year we were able to give to seventy families, representing 280 persons in all.—J. Riddle, The Chapel, Bedford-row, W.C.

Wenlock-road, Hoxton.—To give the little ones attending this school their annual Christmas tea-party. The teacher writes urging the poverty of their homes, and the eagerness with which they look forward to the night's amusement.—Address, E. McVeigh, at the School.

Hackney-road Mission, Union-crescent, N.E.—For the winter fund to supply the needs of the aged and needy and poor little ones in this very indigent neighbourhood with Christmas meals, parcels of grocery, coals.—John Girling, Superintendent and Pastor, 47, Mildmay-road, N.

The East London Indigent Blind Visiting Society contains about 400 blind persons, who are regularly visited by blind missionaries in their own homes. Who will help us to give these a good Christmas dinner and coals through the winter?—William Mead, 83, Malmesbury-road, Bow, E.

The Children's Mission, 251, Southampton-street, Camberwell, S.E. To provide 1000 children with a dinner at Christmas, and also start our free and farthing breakfasts of currant bread and hot cocoa. Knitted cuffs and old Christmas cards and toys also needed.—Alfred H. Roe., Hon. Sec.

The After-Care Association for poor persons discharged recovered from asylums for the insane appeal for funds to carry on and extend their efforts. The objects of the Association are to assist cases (male and female) upon their discharge from asylums for the insane.—Mr. H. Thornhill Roxby, Church House, Dean's Yard, S.W.

Camberwell Mission and Ragged Schools.—The committee are desirous, as in past years, of giving a number of the poorest families a dinner on Christmas day. It is most important, too, that the benevolent work should be continued, consisting as it does of feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and in a variety of ways seeking to mitigate the lot of the poor children and their parents.—Arthur H. Ward, Hon. Sec., 59, Arodene-road, Brixton-hill, S.W.

The British Home for Incurables, Streatham, which provides for the nursing and comfort of its suffering inmates, appeals for 500 new annual subscribers of one guinea each to fill the empty beds in the new home. The charity has now fifty-nine inmates. The home is supposed to accommodate seventy in-patients, but the furnishing of some of the rooms is not yet complete, owing to lack of money. Those only partially disabled and living with friends are granted annuities of £20, and there are now nearly 300 such pensioners.—Sec., Robert G. Salmond, 72, Cheapside, E.C.

The Stockwell Orphanage.—With the near approach of Christmas our boys and girls are looking forward, with all the pleasure of hope, to the usual festivities of the season. As we cannot afford to draw upon our ordinary income for the extra expense which must be incurred, we venture once more to ask special help. We are sure that the thought of giving pleasure to 500 children, all of whom are fatherless, and many of whom are motherless also, will sweeten the mercies which our friends hope to enjoy within their own family circle.—Jas. H. Spurgeon, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

The Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution maintains one hundred aged, infirm and destitute seamen in "The Home" at Belvedere in Kent, and gives a pension of £12 per annum to about 250 others. But unless funds are more liberally supplied, even this most inadequate number cannot be kept up. The worn-out sailor's claims should touch every heart; we are indebted for nearly all our supplies to their life of privation and dangerous toil. It is to these veteran public servants that this institution seeks to afford the necessaries of life, and the means of spending their few remaining years in peace, free from distressing anxieties.—W. E. Denny, Secretary, 58, Fenchurch-street, E.C.

Mission of Help to the Suffering Poor asks help to provide coals for fireless homes, bread and groceries for foodless families, and warm clothing for those suffering from bronchitis, asthma, and consumption, and who are exposed to all winds and weathers in the pursuit of their daily avocation. We are not so much inclined to plead for Christmas dinners and Christmas bounty for our poor. We face for them the long cruel winter, the weeks of frost and snow, when the hungry wolf, who stands before their door all the year round, gains an access, and makes many a hunger-stricken sufferer his ready prey.—(Hon. Sec.) Annie F. Perram, Sydney Lodge, 38, Westbank, Stamford Hill, N.

Field Lane Refuges and Schools.—Mr. W. A. Bevan appeals on behalf of this extensive and varied work, reaching all classes of the poor. While this year a large and exceptional outlay has been incurred in connection with the Boys' Industrial School, the whole work of the institution is vigorously, efficiently, and economically conducted, and I earnestly commend it to the liberal support of the public. The demands upon it during the winter are heavy and urgent. Heart-rending cases of distress appeal for its aid, and it is a painful experience to be compelled, through lack of resources, to send the pleading supplicant away without relief.—The secretary is Mr. Peregrine Platt, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.

ADVENT POEMS.

Draw near on bended knee,
Around the manger-shrine;
Blest are the eyes that see
By faith the Child Divine.
And gifts of rarest worth
Let every true heart bring—
The purest gold, of love untold,
To own Him as our King.

God's gift, unspeakable,
Is He not wondrous fair?
So meekly come to earth,
That we his heaven may share.
Around his cradle-throne
Let incense be outpour'd—
The soul's deep praise, in solemn lays,
To own Him as our Lord.

Yet lower bow the head,
Oh mystery of woe!
A gift of bitter myrrh
His pain and death must show;
It shall, it shall be given,
By every grateful heart;
In every throe, He felt below
His own should bear a part.

Caroline Tickner.

"Gloria in Excelsis," glory!
Harken, 'tis the angels' song,
Echoing o'er the earth so hoary,
Far above the clang of wrong;
Joy in heaven, and peace on earth,
'Tis the Holy Christ Child's birth.
"Gloria in Excelsis."

"Gloria in Excelsis," glory!
O ye bells of Christmas morn,
Tell to all the blessed story
Why the Prince of Peace was born;
Why He came an Infant Child
To the earth in winter wild.
"Gloria in Excelsis."

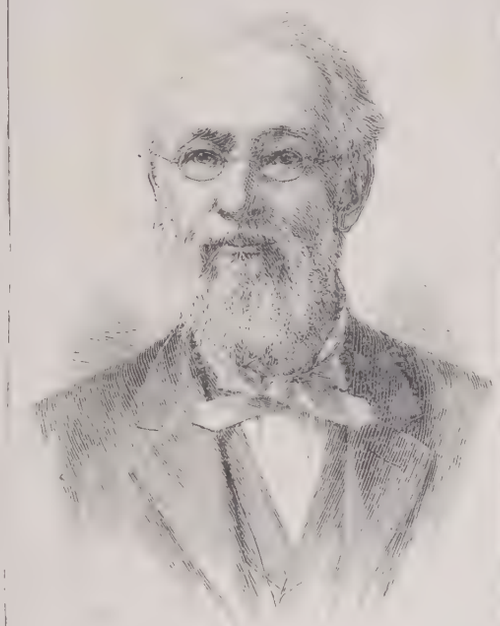
"Gloria in Excelsis," glory!
Sound it far o'er vale and hill;
No more strife or war plains gory,
Peace on earth, to man goodwill;
Christ has come with man to dwell,
Hail, all hail, Immanuel.
"Gloria in Excelsis."

Harriet Julia Evans.

A light broke in upon the world,
The darkness long had held its sway;
Now backward were its forces hurled!
For light had come, the light of day.
Its lucid beam first cleared the East;
Then sped to North, to South, to West!
It shone for greatest and for least;
Remotest isles its warmth confessed.
It came in Nature's darkest night,
Yet few beheld its healing ray!
While many gazed thereon with fright,
But some discerned the "Spring of day."
The mourner now has learned to smile;
The poor and suffering to rejoice,
The hopeless wait in faith awhile,
And everywhere Praise lifts her voice!

M. F. P.

Glory to God, goodwill to man,
Angelic hosts proclaim,
Immanuel to his land has come,
As God with us to reign.
His star has led the Magi on,
They worship at his feet,
With gold, and frankincense, and myrrh,
The lowly Babe they greet.
He came unto his own, but they
The Heir cast out and slew,
And o'er thy land, Immanuel,
The shadows quickly grew.
But Thou wilt come again whose right
Is evermore to reign,
The land is thine, Immanuel,
Thine—river, rock, and plain.
And thine the purchase of the Cross,
Thy soul, not mine, we cry,
Thou hast inheritance in us,
O! Lamb of Calvary.
Thy land, Immanuel, shall bloom,
Thy saints reflect thy grace,
When Thou in righteousness shalt reign
O'er a long exiled race.



E. Braund.

THE LATE

Col. Franklin Fairbanks.

In the removal some time ago of Col. Fairbanks, of St. Johnsbury, Vermont, the American churches suffered great loss, and Northfield, Mr. Moody's village, was among his chief mourners. Col. Fairbanks belonged to a worthy family of Vermonters. His father was one of the State Governors, and one of the leading business men who developed the thriving town of St. Johnsbury, both materially and morally. The great business of the Fairbanks' scales is chiefly indebted for its success to the mechanical genius and financial ability of its late president, who is the subject of this sketch. Col. Fairbanks, by his inventions and mechanical skill, secured the recognition of the U.S. Government, so that his appliances for letter balances have been adopted by nearly every post-office throughout the United States.

But he held every business position subservient to the great aim of his life. He lived to do good. While closely identified with his own local church, both as member and deacon, and gave time and means freely to extend its influence in the community, he served his Master through other channels. He was president and supporter of the Y.M.C.A. both in its local affairs and in its State and International aggressiveness. He was Sunday-school superintendent, to whose heart the lambs of the flock were very dear, and for whose spiritual elevation he laboured most zealously. For many years he had been corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, aiding with his counsel and generous donations to help this great society over many difficult places. Evangelistic work found in him a fellow helper, and he rejoiced greatly when souls were won to Christ.

In recent years he accepted the chairmanship of the Northfield Seminary Trustees, which he filled with ability to the last. He had been the personal friend of Mr. Moody, and enjoyed close fellowship with the evangelist for many years.

In regard to his religious experience, Col. Fairbanks gave evidence during his forty years of church membership that faith in Christ was the root of his spiritual life. And so in the closing days of his pilgrimage, while his mind was clear, he gave utterance to his convictions in no doubtful manner. He recognised himself as but a channel for distribution. Wealth did not stagnate in his hands. He sought to lead those for whom he invested earthly treasure to secure their treasure in heaven. While his services for his men were varied, he ever aimed at their physical and moral improvement.

Col. and Mrs. Fairbanks have left two daughters, who emulate the example of their parents in every good work. Mrs. Fairbanks (who died two months before her husband) deserves more than passing mention. A woman of deep spirituality, ripe intellect, and social power, she sought not to shine in worldly society, but to be her husband's help-meet in promoting the welfare of others. In this lofty purpose she was eminently successful. Like the virtuous woman eulogised by King Lemuel, she did her husband good and not evil all the days of her life, and now "her children rise up and call her blessed."

A LITTLE CHILD'S SURRENDER.

[The following touching little incident will reach many a parent's heart as a striking illustration of the workings of the Spirit in a little child. May it be given to all who read it, to know equal submission to the will of God.—Ed.]

Last year my little boy died of a lingering illness of heart disease at twelve years of age. I knew there was no hope of recovery, and I believe I was absolutely surrendered to the will of God.

I used to talk and read to him of heaven; and we used to sing together of it. The dear little fellow would say: "I love Jesus, mamma; Jesus has forgiven me all my sins. But I don't want to die. I don't want to go to heaven yet, I should like to live. I don't mind being a poorly man. I will be a rich man if Jesus will let me live, but I don't want to go away from home and you."

I prayed to the Lord about it, very low down, I can tell you, for that is the place to be heard. "Lord," I cried, "Thou canst have my boy. But reveal Thyself in a way that he can understand. Take away this fear."

As we were having our little prayer together the same evening, he put his dear hands together with closed eyes, and said, "Dear Jesus, I am fully surrendered." I had never used the words to him, neither had I heard him say them before. The next morning as I was about my work, I heard him call, "Mamma, come here to me! come up close,' and the dear arms went round my neck, as he whispered, "Jesus has been to me, and He said, 'Fear not, Willy, yours is the kingdom of heaven.'" One little tie held the child; he wanted to live with mamma, fully surrendered now; no more fear. Next day, he went into the presence of the King. Dear reader, God will meet you, if you will meet Him, on the conditions of absolute surrender. This slavish fear is of the devil. God is not a hard taskmaster, but a wise and loving Father, whose ways are mercy and peace to those who fear Him.

You may have nothing to surrender but failure all round, within and without, as a dry, barren wilderness. But surrender all, and He will make the wilderness to blossom as the rose, and the waste places fruitful plains. Instead of slavish fear will spring up filial love, which knows no other fear but that of grieving Him, your Father and your God.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.—Great anxiety (according to the Central News) is felt among the friends of the missionaries of the Baptist Missionary Society stationed in the Shensi district of China. No news has been received since the end of August, and the telegraph wires to the coast have been cut. So serious was the condition of things at Shensi when the last news from Shanghai was dispatched on October 12, that the English Consul at Hankow refused to grant Rev. Evan Morgan a passport to go to Shensi or Kansuh. Since then intelligence has come to hand of the capture of Lanchow, the capital of Shensi, by the rebels. The missionaries stationed at Shensi are Rev. A. G. Shorrock and Mr. and Mrs. Duncan and their child.

FIGHTING THE OPIUM.

No process of jugglery, mental or literary, can turn elemental and moral wrong into even the semblance of right. It is one of the standing mysteries of human life that men in possession o a conscience should justify to themselves and others the maintenance of that which inflicts awful ruin on a great portion of the race. Yet this is what the defenders of the opium traffic are essaying to do. Sleepless vigilance and unceasing agitation must be the watchword of those who believe that right is right and wrong is wrong, though all the politicians in the world assert the contrary. In this spirit an all-day conference was held on Friday last in St. Martin's Town Hall, with the view of calling public attention to the present aspects of the opium question, and of considering the duty of the hour with respect to it.

THE ROYAL COMMISSION.

At the morning meeting, after prayer by Rev. J. G. Stuart, Sir Joseph Pease, who was in the chair, gave a very lucid and weighty résumé of the recent course of the agitation. He said it had never been in any sense a money question, but a great moral question and a Christian question. As to the doings of the late Royal Commission, Sir Joseph spoke with great severity of the biassed and onesided action of the Indian Government, and of the majority of the Commission. The Indian opium revenue, however, is steadily going down; the estimate for next year's Indian Budget is only a little over £2,000,000. Our work in this crusade is not ended by the work of the Commission. Let us never cease till we have taken away the stain of an immoral traffic, which is demoralising an entire people.

The following lengthy resolution was moved by Mr. J. E. Ellis, M.P. :—

That inasmuch as the late Royal Commission was appointed to investigate and report upon a system of revenue derived from a drug manufactured and traded in by the Indian Government, it was especially bound to preserve an attitude of complete independence of that Government.

That by assuming at the outset of the proceedings that the Government of India would "arrange the course of inquiry, places to be visited, and witnesses";

by accepting at their first sitting in Calcutta a minatory letter from the Governor-General;

by receiving the great bulk of the evidence from persons selected, and whose testimony was examined and supervised by Indian officials;

by taking no steps to assure intending witnesses of absolute protection either before or after one of their own colleagues had been tracked by the police, and questions had been put by the latter to natives on whom he had called;

by placing the preparation of their report in the hands of subordinates of the Indian Government;

by allowing the Special Agent of that Government attached to the Commission to add 150 pages of highly controversial matter on an aspect of the case on which the chairman had stopped one of the witnesses from giving evidence; and, finally,

by the action of the chairman in peremptorily notifying that, without any regard to the matter to be discussed, the Commission must cease its labours on an early and certain day,

The Commission failed to preserve that independence of the Executive, and to maintain those methods of procedure which have long been recognised in this country as essential to satisfactory investigation and an impartial verdict.

This Conference, therefore, is of opinion that the report of the majority of the Commission can be accepted only as the ex parte statement of advocates, and not in any sense as the authoritative utterance of a judicial tribunal.

In commenting on the seven counts in this comprehensive indictment, Mr. Ellis had no difficulty in showing that the Indian authorities, including the Governor-General, had acted in a way altogether contrary to our ideas of impartiality and justice. The methods which they took in the collection of evidence were such as would not be tolerated for a moment in our home parliamentary committees or judicial courts. As to the drawing up of the report by subordinates of the Indian Government, Mr. Ellis could scarcely find language in which to express his indignant surprise at the plan pursued. He also roundly condemned the action of Lord Brassey, the chairman of the Commission, in connection with the formulating of the report. The sting of the whole matter lay in the closing sentence of the resolution, which declared that the report is merely an ex parte deliverance and not at all "the authoritative utterance of a judicial tribunal."

In seconding the resolution, Rev. J. P. Gledstone [illegible] said experience had shown that Government Blue-books are not to be blindly accepted, but rather to be critically examined. The effect on the mind of the Indian people, when they become familiar with the doings of this Commission, must be such as greatly to weaken our authority among them. As to the Christian aspect of the matter, Mr. Gledstone declared that Royal commissions and elaborate reports cannot alter the eternal sanctions of the Gospel, and we must continue to oppose this terrible wrong till it is swept away. The resolution was supported by

Rev. Thomas Evans, of India, in a carefully prepared and temperately expressed statement, based on ample personal knowledge; proving that the inquiry of the Commission was not conducted on fair lines, and that its conclusions are not to be received as of any real value. Its weight is greatly invalidated by the fact that a large body of the Indian evidence was taken from those under the thumb of the Government.

In supporting the resolution, Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., brought to light some "new points" as to the Commission arrangements. He rather threw the responsibility of the methods adopted in the drawing up of the report on the majority of the Commission itself, who allowed themselves to be twisted round the fingers of the subordinate officials of the Indian Government. He contended that, as the Government have already virtually prohibited the poppy cultivation in some regions of the Punjaub, the same thing can be done elsewhere. A point in the report open to grave objection is the way in which the past statistics of opium consumption are treated. The report states that the increase of consumption between 1883 and 1891 was only some 8 per cent.; but the figures of the intervening years (ignored by the Commission) show an increase at one period of more than 36 per cent. Speaking of the majority report as a whole, Mr. Wilson solemnly asserted that there is scarcely a single page or paragraph in it which, if thoroughly examined and carefully criticised, will not break down, and be found to contain serious fallacies and errors. Those who feel interested in this question will find, after examination, that the whole thing is not worth the paper it is written upon.

The resolution was carried without a dissentient voice.

OPIUM AND INDIA.

At the afternoon gathering the important bearings of the opium question on India occupied attention. Mr. Joshua Rowntree, who presided, referred, in a few words, to the topic of the morning. He maintained that the fact that a Commission had inquired and reported on the subject did not in the least degree absolve any Englishman from his responsibility in the ultimate solution of the problem. No Royal Commission can settle a great national question. The chairman dwelt on several points as to which the treatment of the Commission was highly unsatisfactory—e.g., the matters of infant mortality and incitements to vice.

A resolution dealing with the necessity for a Poisons Act in India was moved by Dr. Huntly, of Rajpootana. His remarks, however, were mainly confined to a recital of his own experiences, first, among the natives, and then in connection with the opinions of English medical men in India. All these experiences and investigations proved the widespread feeling among the natives as to the evils of the opium habit. Some startling statements as to the attitude of medical men were cited by Dr. Huntly. One official told him that it was an awful thing to have to speak against his conscience, but he had to do it. Another who held anti-opium views would not proffer evidence to the Commission because it would stop his promotion. Dr. Huntly alluded to Sir Wm. Moore's evidence, parts of which he had personally tested in Rajpootana, and he came to the conclusion that though Dr. Moore had been 33½ years there, he was yet totally ignorant of the customs of the Rajpoots among whom he lived.

Dr. Maxwell dealt specially with the resolution demanding a restrictive Poisons Act, and showed how the two poisons—arsenic and opium—which chiefly caused the murders, suicides, and cases of infanticide in India, were thoroughly under Government control, and there would be no difficulty in imposing the necessary restrictions.

Another resolution, condemning the opium-smoking habit, and calling for its prohibition, was moved by Mr. W. S. Caine. He said one could not regard with any degree of patience the excise arrangements of the Indian Government. He had no hesitation in asserting that the system was designed with the view of raising as much revenue as possible out of the people. He contended that the prohibition of these sources of national ruin would be perfectly easy in India, because the Government has the thing entirely in its hands, and there is no question of compensation. Mr. Caine made a most vigorous and scathing exposure of the inconsistent excise methods throughout India, and demanded that the Burmese system of prohibition (except as to medical provision) should be applied to the whole of our vast dependency. The resolution was seconded by Mr. Hind Smith, who testified something of what he had seen of the evil effects of opium, during a visit to India.

Mr. J. G. Alexander moved a third resolution, calling for the protection of the native populations of the British Crown Colonies in the East. In the Straits Settlements, he said, a very large proportion of the Government revenue is derived from the excise, and the traffic in those countries is of a very odious kind. The connection between vice and opium is nowhere so apparent as in these cities of the Malayan peninsula. The opium pipe is an inseparable adjunct of the den of ill-fame. In Ceylon the growth of the opium import has increased eightfold during the last fifty years, and there is a very earnest movement in the island for its prohibition in common use. The resolution was seconded by Rev. John Hunter, from Scotland, and heartily carried.

CHINA.

At the evening meeting a letter from Dr. Muirhead, the Chinese missionary, was read by Mr. Broomhall, the hon. sec. of the Conference. He described the state of things in the British settlement of Shanghai, and said that things are permitted there which never would be tolerated in the native city. In opening the consideration of the evening's topic, Dr. Maxwell (who presided) said that the Christian churches of this country had with one voice condemned the opium trade with China as morally indefensible and involving a great wrong to the Chinese people. Dr. Maxwell sketched the history of the export of the drug from India to China, and combatted the various pleas advanced in defence of the traffic. One of these pleas is the immense extent of the trade that now exists in China itself. Let it be remembered, however, that this dreadful development of the evils in China is of recent date, and for that increase the Indian Government, and ultimately the English people, are responsible. All the more reason why we should at length withdraw from the trade. As a result of that, the manufacture would assuredly gradually decay in China. To corroborate this point in the chairman's speech, Mr. Alexander interposed to say that the great Chinese Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, in a personal interview with him last year, definitely said:—"If you cease to send our people poison from India, we will not allow them to produce it for themselves."

It will be well to reproduce in extenso the lengthy resolution submitted to the meeting, as it embodies all the great main arguments in favour of the abolition of the China trade:—

That this Conference desires to place afresh before the people of Great Britain the following facts:—

1. That on the first planting of the Christian Church in China, following on the opening of the Treaty Ports, it was found impossible to ignore the universal sentiment of condemnation among the Chinese attaching to opium-smoking as an immoral habit, and that this at once, and necessarily, determined the exclusion from the privileges of Church membership of all persons addicted to the habit.
2. That after fifty years it is the universal rule to-day in the Christian Church over all China to exclude from church membership the opium-grower, the opium-seller, and the opium-smoker.
3. That at the Missionary Conference held at Shanghai in 1877, when 126 missionaries, representing twenty missionary societies, were present from ten of the provinces of China, it was unanimously resolved "that opium-smoking is a vice highly injurious physically, morally, and socially"; and "both from its past history and present enormous extent, producing suspicion and dislike in the minds of the Chinese, is a most formidable obstacle to the cause of Christianity"; "and that it is the earnest desire of this Conference that the trade may be speedily suppressed."
4. That at the Missionary Conference held at Shanghai in 1890, when 445 missionaries, representing 35 different societies, were present from nearly every province in the empire, it was resolved with equal unanimity, "that we, as a Conference, re-affirm and maintain our attitude of unflinching opposition to the opium traffic."
5. And that these views represent the opinions of men—many of them medical men—who in all parts of the empire have had the fullest opportunity of observing the effects of the habit on the physical, moral, and social condition of the Chinese, and whose testimony is not to be impeached.

That in view of these indisputable facts:—

This Conference calls upon the Government to prohibit the export of opium from India to China, and so bring to an end our national connection with a trade, the one aim of which is to multiply opium-smokers—that is to say, the victims of a habit which the Royal Commission acknowledges in its report to be universally condemned in India, which the Japanese will not tolerate under any pretext in their country, which has wrought untold degradation and ruin in China, and which brings our national action into direct opposition to the work of the Christian Church.

And further—

That in view of these universally admitted facts—

This Conference calls upon all who have any real regard for the honour and welfare of this country, and for what the fear of God and Christian principle demand, to help to bring to an end a trade so destructive of the well-being of millions of mankind.

The resolution was moved by Rev. C. C. Fenn, of the C.M.S., in a most earnest and cogent speech. It was seconded and supported by Mr. M. Beauchamp, of the C.I.M., Rev. Thomas Evans, Mr. C. T. Studd, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, of the L.M.S., and others. Mr. Beauchamp said that apart from opium-smoking, there are thousands of suicides in China every day from opium-eating. As to Japan, the authorities there are so determined to exclude the evil from their country that when he visited Japan in Chinese dress, his very pockets were searched to see if any opium was concealed there. The testimony of the very "heathen Chinee" is that opium is at the top of all evil deeds; while the native Christians make great sacrifices to show their detestation of it. Mr. Evans exposed in vigorous style, and with some fulness of detail, the shady doings of Indian officials in disregarding the orders of the Home Government on these moral questions. The recent Commission ought to have gone to China instead of India, where the evils are much less.

Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road.—Last winter, when the weather was at its severest point, free teas and other relief were given. Christmas is duly celebrated at the Tabernacle, but Christmas chimes have very little music for hungry men and women. Who will help us to provide a good dinner, a warm fire, and some clothing for our needy brethren and sisters, and so bring a little cheer into their hard and monotonous lives?—D. M. Cameron, 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

The Evangelist.

A POWERFUL APPEAL.

By the Late Rev. A. A. Rees, of Sunderland.*

"Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God."—Acts xx. 26-27.

First, let me address myself to those, who, notwithstanding all the solemn warnings, the awful threatenings, the earnest entreaties, the pressing invitations they have heard, who, notwithstanding the whole counsel of God hath been declared unto them, are yet, to all intents and purposes, at this moment just as unconcerned about their eternal welfare as they were at the beginning. Consciences, be awake! Unhappy sinners! you have long heard my warnings: you will hear them no more. I have long warned you to flee from the wrath to come, I have not played with you, I have not trifled with you, much less has God trifled with you; but you have trifled with God, and you have trifled with me.

What I have said I have been in earnest in saying; what I have said I have not said as a matter of course; I have felt all true that I have spoken. He who tried to trouble you for your soul's good will trouble you no more; he who tried to disquiet you will make no more attempts to do that; he who tried to shake you out of your false ease and ruinous security will now leave you alone. I have spent all my darts; I once had a quiver full of arrows, but that quiver is empty now. The last is spent. They have flown over your heads, but they have fixed in the hearts of some. You have heard the same truths which have awakened them, which have aroused them, which have made them flee from the wrath to come, and which have brought them to the knowledge of Christ, whilst they have left you, as you were at first, sunk in impenitence and unbelief. I have done.

Whether God has done with you or not I cannot tell; whether God is leaving you or not I cannot tell—if God does leave you, if God does abandon you, if his Spirit ceases to strive with you, then you are undone. But this is not certain: God's long-suffering may not yet be wearied out; God's patience may not yet be expended; ye are yet in the land of hope, ye are yet on the ground of mercy—black though your sins may be, even now the blood of Christ is able to wash them away.

Therefore I make one more appeal to you, my last appeal. Because God's long-suffering is not yet wearied, because you are where the blood of Christ and the Spirit of God are at work, I make one more appeal to you, and I say to you, Repent, repent! Unawakened sinner, repent! Impenitent sinner, lost sinner, repent, repent, or you will perish! Break down before Almighty God! Have you not resisted Him long enough? Have you not resisted Him all your life? Have you not nearly wearied his patience out? Repent, O repent!

[At this portion of the sermon several persons wept loudly, others fainted, and great numbers of the congregation were deeply affected by these solemn and awakening appeals. An extraordinary feeling pervaded all; and amidst the heavy sobs of many penitents the reverend preacher proceeded in a pathetic and impassioned tone]:—

Oh, my people, I call upon you, I beseech you, I entreat you, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ—I call upon you once more—I say, repent, and flee from the wrath to come. [During the whole of this stirring part of the sermon the deep-felt emotion of a great portion of the auditors gave vent to itself in heavy sobs and in tears.]

Next, let me address those, who, though they are not satisfied with their state before God, yet are not so thoroughly dissatisfied with it as to be infinitely in earnest to flee from the wrath to come. I address these especially, who, though they are not quite satisfied with their state—who, though they do not think if they were to die at present they would go to heaven, yet who are not stirred up, who are not so thoroughly disquieted, who are not so thoroughly broken down, so contrite in spirit, so broken in heart, as to have no rest until they are assured of their salvation. Sinners, you have long heard my warning voice: you have long heard me warning you to flee from the wrath to come; and you have long heard me warning you against half-heartedness in religion; you have often heard me tell you that although many shall seek to enter in at the strait gate, yet that none shall be able but those who strive; you have long heard these warnings from me. I have done all that I could; I have used all possible motives to induce you not to halt between two opinions, but to be on the side of God altogether, and let go the world and the devil, but now my warnings have ceased; now my voice is hushed.

You will hear these warnings no more from me, and, therefore, for aught I can do to stir you up to be concerned to secure your eternal welfare—for aught I can do, you must be among the number of those who shall seek to enter in and not be able. But you are in the land of hope—you are on mercy's ground, and therefore I make one last appeal to you. What! only a little disquieted when you have the chains of the devil about you! only a little troubled when a thread suspends you over perdition! Oh, what madness is this! Is not this trifling with God? God will not be trifled with. No, no! "No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." Awake, awake! Oh half-hearted sinner, awake! Give yourself wholly to the Saviour. Oh, rest not satisfied! Do you hope to be saved? Do you hope to be saved because you seek to be saved? Many shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able. It is Christ who has said, Strive to enter in at the narrow gate, into which few enter, and I know few enter, for many shall seek, half-hearted Christians shall seek, to enter in, and shall not be able.

If you perish, you perish willingly, you perish perversely, and I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of you all, for "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." I have not shunned to declare that God's counsel is to reject half-hearted sinners; I have not shunned to declare unto you that it is Christ's purpose to say to many at the last day, who shall cry, "Lord, Lord, open to us," "I never knew you." Sinner, half-hearted sinner, will you ever rest until "you are Christ's, and Christ is yours"? We meet once again; till then, farewell!

* Extracted from a farewell address on leaving his church Dec. 4, 1842.

COLPORTAGE IN MEXICO.

Mr. Eglon Harris, of Orizaba, in a letter dated November 14, reports a visit to Tehuacan, in company with a colporteur. He says: "It was the most encouraging Bible tour we have had. Only once were our lives threatened; we sold 171 Bibles, Testaments, and portions, and distributed over 5000 Gospel papers. People are more willing to converse with us after having read a succession of our tracts and seen their character; so that a week seems too short to take in all the places we plan to visit.

"The Lord graciously cheered me at Tehuacan Over three years ago I gave a few Bibles to some men who I found read the tracts I regularly carried to their houses. During the three years of residence in Orizaba, when visiting Tehuacan, I have left tracts with these same men. This last time I left it with the colporteur to visit some of them. Not knowing, he offered the Bible for sale to one of them. 'Oh,' said the man, 'I have found salvation in that book. A señor gave me one three years ago. I think he was English. I have read some parts of the book very many times, and I believe it. I have compared it with other books I have, but this one alone has got the truth.' Questioned about the ground of his hope, he at once turned to Romans v. 1, thus showing his acquaintance with the New Testament. I need not tell you all that followed that caused us to 'thank God and take courage.' An almost similar experience was repeated the same day with another man.

The English correspondent of the work is Mr. John Mercer, 143, Dickenson-road, Rusholme, Manchester.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTMAS AMUSEMENTS.

Dear Sir,—It would be a great boon to many of your readers if you could open your columns to the ventilation of the question of entertainments.

The Christian Church at this season of the year is flooded with entertainments, and those in authority are continually feeling the tug of the less spiritually-minded in the direction of worldly amusements.

It must be remembered that those who feel this difficulty have generally not had the opportunity of regulating the matter from the beginning.

What we desire is not so much to know what might or ought to be, but to hear the experience of those who have solved the question of how to satisfy the craving of the mind for change and recreation of a bright order, in a manner consistent with the pure and lofty aims of Christianity.—Yours truly, Rusticus.

SUNDAY POSTAL LABOUR.

Dear Sir,—I should be glad if you or your readers could recommend to me a good tract on the above subject. I saw one some time ago, but cannot remember what it was called, or who the writer was.

It struck me, while reading the letter by "Mercy" in The Christian of December 12, that it might be a good plan for any of your readers who are interested in this matter to keep a few tracts on the subject by them, ready for use. Then I would propose that whenever a letter is received that is clearly proved to have been posted either late on the Saturday night or on Sunday, the receiver in his reply should enclose one of the tracts, thereby drawing attention to the fact, without having said anything in his letter on the subject.

Then the question will arise, "Would anyone take offence on receiving such a tract"? This fear, I think, could be overcome by having a carefully-worded pamphlet. I would also suggest that the words, "Please pass it on," or something to that effect, might appear prominently on the tract.

Another thought was that a small adhesive label might be used, about the size of a postage stamp, or perhaps a little larger, and this might be stuck on the back of the envelope.—Yours faithfully,

40, Lady Margaret-road, N.W. C. J. P.

MEDICAL MISSION WORK IN E. LONDON.

A medical mission was founded by Dr. Barnardo in 1878, at 224, High-street, Shadwell, close to Ratcliff Highway. A few years ago Dr. Barnardo was obliged to withdraw from the Medical Mission the staff of deaconesses who had carried on such an active work amongst the poor, and was unable to supply medical attendance. About this time Livingstone College was founded, and an arrangement was entered into by which the Medical Mission became asssociated with the College, while retaining its connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes, he having agreed to contribute a fixed sum each year towards its maintenance. The development of the Mission, however, has been left in our hands, and we have the responsibility of raising the greater part of the working expenses.

Most valuable opportunities are here afforded for medical mission work amongst the poor of Shadwell. Those who know anything about this locality will realise the importance of this. Up to the present time, however, it has been quite impossible to develop the Mission, and although just now we have the opportunity of securing the services of a young Christian medical man as resident medical officer, lack of funds prevents our engaging him and hopelessly cripples the work. Unless Christian friends will kindly come to our aid, it may be impossible to carry on the Mission, as it is a principle of Livingstone College that debt shall not be incurred.

Charles F. Harford-Battersby, M.D.,
Principal of Livingstone College.

PEACE SUNDAY occurs on December 22, and the observance of it will be very valuable and desirable in every locality. The Peace Society is doubling its efforts this year by sending out nearly 25,000 invitations to preach Peace sermons. But even such great exertion requires local co-operation to give it full effect. During the past two months Dr. Darby, the secretary of the Peace Society, with a view to promote an interest in the observance of Peace Sunday on the Continent, has paid several visits to Paris, Brussels, Rotterdam, the Hague, Amsterdam, Bremen, Hamburg, and Berlin.

THE Y.W.C.A.

A new branch is being started at Canning Town. Our Own Gazette will shortly be enlarged, and will contain more Y.W.C.A. intelligence.

An encouraging increase of the number of members is reported from the Ashbourne branch.

In connection with the Bromyard Y.W.C.A., a sale of work, opened by Mrs. Phipps, the local president, has been held in aid of the Training Home for Missionaries.

At a well-filled meeting held at the Raikes Memorial Hall, Gloucester, on Dec. 3, to inaugurate the opening of the new room, Miss Biddiford, hon. sec, stated that since August the number of members had risen from 80 to 196.

An Occasional Paper issued by the teachers' department contains a seasonable letter to teachers by Mrs. Amand Routh, hon. secretary of the department. Cheering news is given of work at Carlisle, Maldon, Leyton, West Ham, Wimbledon, etc. Mrs. Routh's address is 14A, Manchester-square, W.

A meeting of secretaries and workers in the N.W. district, convened by Miss Minchin, was held at the St. John's Wood Institute. There was a good attendance. The first hour was spent in conference concerning the work, including the foreign missionary department, represented by Mrs. Percy Grubb, and the evangelistic department, represented by Mrs. Cave. After prayer a short address was given by Miss Minchin.

Miss Hay Chapman writes disclaiming the honour of being "the founder of the Park Mission," which was in operation before she took it up. She was, however, the means of having a home opened in connection therewith, which has done valuable service. The work is now carried on by Mrs. John Chapman, of Suffolk House, Harrow (known to many as Miss Stroud, of Mildmay), with the assistance of a resident hon. worker, who lives at the Lodge. The need of support is very urgent.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Mr. W. H. S. McMillan, of Mountpottinger, Belfast, is resigning his position in favour of general evangelistic work.

Rev. John McNeill has promised to conduct a mission under the auspices of the Sheffield Y.M.C.A. from February 2 to 16 next.

As a result of the mission conducted recently by Mr. W. R. Lane, the spiritual side of the Birkenhead Y.M.C.A. has received a great impetus.

A successful meeting was held on Wednesday evening by the small Association at Aldershot. The membership has been augmented, and there is now a prospect of good work being done.

A Christmas morning breakfast meeting has been arranged at 8.30 a.m. by the Hackney Association. Addresses will be delivered by Dr. Gritton, Mr. W. T. Paton, and Mr. Robert Burn.

Mr. Arthur Nichols has resigned the general secretaryship of the Melbourne Association, having been appointed secretary for the Victorian Auxiliaries Union of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Mr. W. J. Meredith, who has laboured at the Cairns Memorial House, Bournemouth, for nearly nine years as the esteemed and valued secretary of the Y.M.C.A., is vacating his office in January next, and is now desirous of finding another sphere of usefulness, either in Y.M.C.A. work or other Christian service. His address is "Muriel," Exeter-road, Bournemouth.

The interest stirred this year by the Week of Prayer, has resulted in increased help being sent from the Associations of this country to the central International Committee at Geneva. This committee is not only the link of connection between the various National Unions, but carries on an active aggressive propaganda in continental countries where Y.M.C.A. work is at present inadequately organised.

The young men's Sunday afternoon Bible class at the Leeds Y.M.C.A. has now a membership of upwards 200, with an average attendance of about 120 for the year. The class was commenced two years ago under exceptional difficulties, yet God has blessed the effort abundantly, not only in the point of attendance and interest, but there have been several very decided cases of conversion amongst the members.

At a recent gathering of the National Council of Y.M.C.A. Rev. H. E. Fox, M.A., hon. sec. of the Church Missionary Society, said it was a remarkable fact that, in examining the many male candidates who came before that society it was found that, almost without exception, the Y.M.C.A. came in at some part of the candidate's history—either having been instrumental in his conversion in training him for Christian work, or in stimulating his zeal for Gospel and missionary activity. It was peculiarly gratifying to him that the real missionary spirit was being so strongly manifested in the Associations and the various kindred organisations allied with them.

Mr. W. Hind Smith has recently visited many of the Associations in the Western and Midland districts. Bath members' annual was the best held for many years, and showed the Association to be fully alive in all its departments. Totterdown has resolved to engage an evening secretary, and has already received the greatest encouragement financially in this direction. Kingswood, a suburb of Bristol, has purchased new premises, and is doing an excellent work. Shrewsbury has taken in hand much successful "sectional" work, and has held a series of very gratifying socials for soldiers, railway men, post-office officials, etc. The work at Wednesbury has been greatly revived since the Association entered new premises; and Walsall, despite financial difficulties, is making very satisfactory progress under the secretaryship of Mr. F. B. Allen.

PERSONALIA.

Mrs. R. W. Perks, whose Christian labours with her husband are well known, lies seriously ill at Davos Platz, where she is wintering.

Mrs. Lowitz, widow of the late agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has removed to 14, Rue Michelet, Agha Mustapha, Algiers.

Mrs. Stephen J. Alexander, of Bethesda, Dalston, who has been seriously ill for three weeks, prostrated through overwork, is now by God's blessing restored.

Rev. R. Balgarnie and his daughter, Florence Balgarnie, start on December 20 for Egypt, Palestine, Constantinople, and Athens. They hope to return about the end of January.

Mr. J. Bennett Anderson while in South Africa visited Wellington Seminary, and conducted services with some considerable interest. Returning to Cape Town he held there a week's mission.

Rev. Thomas Cook has returned home from his long evangelistic tour in South Africa, the Antipodes, Ceylon, and India. Abundant testimony is forthcoming that his labours have been greatly blessed. Wherever he has gone remarkable interest has been awakened.

Mr. Frank H. White, writing from San Francisco on November 27, reports improved health, and entertains hopes that he "may yet be restored to the most loving and patient of flocks." His sons, too, whose health has occasioned grave anxiety, are both stronger.

Mr. Matthew Burnett is laid aside from active work by nervous prostration. He is now staying in the country, and hopes after the three months' rest his medical adviser insists upon, to be fully restored, and again able to resume his work. His address is Staintondale, Scarborough, Yorks.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse is arranging a visit to South Africa, similar to one paid some years ago to the Australian colonies. He expects to leave this country in the middle of March, and to be back in time to resume his work in September. He intends preaching and lecturing in various parts of South Africa.

Mr. Krikor Behesnilian, whose return to this country we recently announced, would be glad to give an account, at public meetings, of the work he has been enabled to do amongst the Armenians in Tarsus, and of Protestant Christian work generally in that oppressed country. Communications may be addressed to him at the Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall.

Rev. W. E. Hurndall, of Westminster Chapel, and his wife were found in an unconscious condition in their bedroom, St. Ermine's Mansions, on Sunday evening. It is supposed that the chimney became choked during Saturday night, and that fumes from the stove filled the room to suffocation. On restoratives being used the lady speedily recovered, but Mr. Hurndall remained unconscious until Tuesday, on the afternoon of which day he was progressing favourably.

Rev. Pedr Williams.—After a conference of physicians on Sunday, it was decided to perform an operation on Rev. Pedr Williams, whose condition had given rise to the gravest fears. He had been slowly recovering from an attack of typhoid fever, when serious complications were detected. On Monday an operation was performed, and this proved highly successful. The latest report was that the crisis had passed.

Sir W. Brampton Gurdon, K.C.M.G., C.B., an ex-private secretary of Mr. Gladstone's, who has for some time taken a deep interest in colonial missionary work, has placed his services at the disposal of the Zambesi Industrial Mission, and is leaving, at his own cost, shortly for South Africa. He proposes to visit the various stations of the mission, where the natives are engaged in industrial pursuits, and to render such service as occasion may offer.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Wisbech.—A nine days' mission has been held in the Railway Mission Hall by Mr. J. Hawkins. Considerable interest was awakened and real work done. E. P.

Lee.—Mr. Monro Collings has conducted a mission at Bromley-road Tabernacle, Lee, S.E. It has been particularly a blessing to Christians, and many thank God for this visit. J. W. Davies, Pastor.

Exeter.—Rev. R. Balgarnie has completed a seven days' mission at Southernhay Church, Exeter, of which Rev. Justin Evans is pastor. The attendance was encouraging, and much spiritual good accomplished.

Stockton-on-Tees. — For the past three weeks Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has been preaching every night in the large Empire Theatre. A noticeable feature in the mission has been the large proportion of men; they have composed quite two-thirds of the audience on each occasion.

Ireland.—Excellent and fruitful evangelistic services have been held in Mountmellick Methodist Church by Mr. James Dixon, of the Belfast Central Mission, and similar services have been held in Magherafelt Presbyterian Church by Rev. Dr. Rogers, of Whiteabbey, and others.

Essex.—Mr. John Greenwood has concluded Gospel missions in the Bell Common and Ivy Chimneys, Theydon Bois, districts. Crowds attended the services, and the way of salvation, so clearly set forth, has been attended with blessed results. The mission services are being continued in Theydon Bois village. H. M.

Buckhurst Hill. — We have had a successful mission during the past week, with Mr. John Brunton. Several have been saved and believers greatly refreshed. The hall was well filled every afternoon and evening. The Lord has crowned our labours at Princes Hall for twenty years. G. H. Lord.

Tolbooth, Glasgow.—Mr. John Climie is conducting Gospel meetings in the Tolbooth Mission Hall, High-street, Glasgow, in the very centre of the worst slum district of the city. The outlook is most hopeful, large crowds gathering round the open-air meetings, and signs are not wanting of a work of grace among the hearers.

Shetland.—Messrs. McGregor and Crawford, of the Edinburgh Gospel Mission, have concluded a fruitful mission in Dunrossness and Burra Isle. The meetings were well attended, and night after night anxious inquirers remained behind to be shown the way of life and peace. These evangelists have now commenced a series in Burray, Orkney. D. McA.

Airdrie, N.B.—Mr. J. A. Smith, Aberdeen, has closed a fortnight's mission in Glenmavis, Airdrie. There were signs of blessing from the beginning, and the interest deepened as the mission went on. Scarcely an evening passed without some waiting to be pointed personally to the Saviour, some of these being far advanced in life, and had hitherto been living careless about their souls.

Barkingside, Ilford.—A successful fifteen days' mission has been concluded at the Harris Gospel Hall, by Mr. A. H. Ash, of the Evangelisation Society. Our hearts are full of gratitude to God. Eternity alone will reveal the extent of the blessing received. Not only were souls saved, but God's own children were enabled absolutely to surrender themselves unto Him. Lasting blessing, we believe, will be the result. S. B.

Southend.—Mr. Newton Jones recently visited Southend, and God greatly blessed his work to Christian workers and friends. Though announced as a mission for young people, older folks found it equally adapted to them. Ministers and teachers have learnt much by the practical teaching lessons they have received during the mission, and many others have reason to be thankful to God that the evangelist came to Southend. E. A. H.

Mr. and Mrs. Klang are evangelists of a peculiar type. They are at present travelling in New South Wales. They settle down in a township for some weeks or a month or two, as the case may be. He practises his profession, and when opportunity offers takes services for some of the Evangelical churches. He is an earnest, simple-hearted man, happy when telling out the message of salvation or preaching the Coming of the Lord. His wife is of great assistance.

Glasgow.—Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a ten days' mission in London-road Free Church, Glasgow, which, in spite of limited length and tempestuous weather, has proved rich in definite results. The evangelist's well-directed appeals were found increasingly interesting and helpful to Christians and inquirers, with the result that the former were stimulated, encouraged, and refreshed, while several of the latter were drawn out of darkness into God's marvellous light. The mission reached its culmination in the fine praise meeting which closed the fruitful series, when preacher and audience alike were filled with joyous gratitude. P. H.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The annual volume of that now venerable serial, Old Jonathan, is very attractive, both inside and out. This monthly seems to wear a perennial youth. (1s. 6d. Collingridge.)

Those who are interested in Gospel work among the Jews will find many interesting articles and sketches in Jewish Missionary Intelligence, vol. xi. of the new series. For younger readers there is the Jewish Missionary Advocate. Both are in connection with the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews, and are fully illustrated. Oriental customs and ghetto scenes are admirably described, alongside Christian testimony to Israel in many lands. (Nisbet & Co.)

Bubbles is a volume which will be heartily welcomed by the young. As we have pointed out in noticing the monthly parts, the illustrations are coloured, and are numerous and of a high class. The heart as well as the hand of the editor, Dr. Barnardo, is evident throughout, and those who read will have their sympathies with the needy drawn out as well as their minds cultivated. There is in this handsome book, with its hundred full-page chromo-lithographs, much to edify and entertain; and boys and girls will be delighted to receive such a present. (Fancy boards 3s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 5s. Office, 279, Strand, W.C.)

SOME STORY BOOKS.

Shifting Sands, by Susan Carpenter, shows something of the awful results of taking strong drink, and of the terrible temptations to which many are subjected in this direction (1s. 6d. Church of England Temperance Society). Mona's Inheritance: or, "Who hath Despised the Day of Small Things?" by Laura A. Barter, is a Gospel message as well as a good story (1s. 6d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling). In a Difficult Position, by Christian Burke, has an abundance of incident; and who will not wonder what resulted from the bravery of the curate who rescued a young lady from a burning house? (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society). Dr. Brent's Neighbours: A Tale of Two Homes during the Great War. By Dora M. Jones. The homes show a great contrast, for in the one was piety, which was lacking in the other. The pages afford a good idea of English life at the beginning of the century (2s. Charles H. Kelly). For Honour's Sake, by Jennie Chappell, is a lively story, now issued in a cheap and attractive edition (2s. Partridge & Co.). Dora's Mistake, by A. L. O. E. (new edition), presents teaching regarding the Tabernacle and its services in a form that should greatly help the young to grasp Scripture truth (1s. 6d. Shaw & Co.). Dean-Hurst, by Sarah Selina Hamer, shows the nobility of being disposed to sacrifice present advantage at the call of conscience, honour, and love (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly). Sowing beside all Waters, by Emma Leslie, is a capital tale of the Early Church. The scene is laid in the days of Constantine and Julian, and the Nicene Council is described. The real design, however, is to exhibit the influence which was exerted by Christian slaves, the early life of Chrysostom and Augustine affording a ground-work for the story. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society).

Waterworks! By Robert Overton. (Jarrold & Sons.) Depite the somewhat vulgar title, these "temperance readings and recitations" are marked by cleverness and in some cases undoubted pathos. If well read or rendered they will afford no small entertainment at temperance gatherings.

The Christmas part of "Bubbles," entitled Birds in the Nest (1s.), has a number of brightly coloured pictures and pleasing stories, besides a series of painting and other competitions for the holidays. The large coloured plate, "Wintry Frolics," will delight the little folks. (Office: 279, Strand, W.C.)

The History of the Baptists in Radnorshire: With a Sketch of the History of Nonconformity in the County. By John Jones, Baptist minister, Llandrindod Wells. (Elliot Stock.) These pages are of limited interest; but those who know Radnorshire, or are acquainted with Gospel work in Wales, will find them worth reading.

Three Years in Cachar: With a Short Account of the Manipur Massacre. By M. J. Wright. (2s. 6d. Partridge.) A lady describes her surroundings and experiences, some of them very exciting, during a stay in India. Students of mission work in our great Oriental dependency will read the pages with pleasure, as the author writes in terms of hearty sympathy with Christian effort.

Spring's Immortality, and other Poems. By Mackenzie Bell. (3s. 6d. Ward, Lock & Bowden.) We welcome a second edition of this volume. Whether admiring nature or praising God, the author is chaste in expression and tuneful in measure. The poems founded on historical incidents are characterised by special vigour. The get-up of the book indicates it as highly suitable for presentation.

St. Paul's Reasons (Rom. xi.) for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. This booklet contains sermons by Archdeacon Sinclair, Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, Canon McCormick, Revs. J. Eustace Brenan, and Gilbert S. Karney, with a preface by Rev. C. H. Banning, vicar of Christ Church, Highbury, in which building the sermons were preached during Lent last. The pages deserve many readers. (London Jews' Society, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.)

Union with God: A Series of Addresses. By J. Rendel Harris. (4s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Twelve chapters by a mystic, not uniform of interest, sometimes doubtful in teaching. The idea expressed in the title is worked out in a suggestive manner, but as it is not always obvious what the professor is driving at, while sometimes it is clear that speculative notions lead him beyond Scripture verity, we should only recommend the book to those who can read with discrimination.

A Pocket Compass for Zion's Travellers, by Robert Anderson, gives Scripture texts and readings for every day of the month. The preface informs us that the papers have been written by "one who is engaged in commercial life, but who for more than thirty years has found it a privilege to labour in various kinds of Christian service, and has experienced the value of Holy Scripture for comfort and direction." The readings are calculated to help travellers Zionward. (1s. James P. Mathew & Co., Cowgate, Dundee.)

The Epistles to Timothy and Titus: Edited with Introduction and Notes, by Rev. A. E. Humphreys, M.A. (3s. Cambridge University Press Warehouse). completes the New Testament division of the Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges. The series includes many volumes of sterling worth, and this last may rank among the most valuable. The pages evince careful scholarship and a thorough acquaintance with expository literature; and the work should promote a more general and practical study of the Pastoral Epistles.

Thoughts for Class Leaders. (C. H. Kelly.) The object of this volume, edited by Rev. I. E. Page, of Hexham, and Mr. T. H. Bainbridge, of Newcastle, is to supply stimulating ideas to class leaders. The contributors number forty, for the most part well-known Methodist ministers. The thoughts are succinctly expressed, and numbered; a classified index assists the reader in studying a subject from many points of view. This is emphatically a treasury of good things; and it is hoped that the second series, which is in course of preparation, will be equally terse in style and helpful in substance.

Mr. George Stoneman sends Points and Illustrations, compiled by Rev. John Mitchell (2s. 6d.), wherein preachers and teachers will find useful material to point a moral or adorn a tale. From the same we have Roger Durdon, by Rev. H. E. Stone (1s. 6d.), a Y.M.C.A. story of a young man's trials and temptations—real and vivid they seem as one reads—and final deliverance. Our Native Land. By F. E. Longley (1s. 6d.) An illustrated ramble, with notes by the way, through the three kingdoms; with 108 views of various places of fame and interest, The Bridal King. By Rev. W. Frith (1d.), a booklet for the newly married.

Only to Trust the Master, a poem by Mary Gorges, has been published as a booklet, with handsome illuminated cover. (W. G. Wheeler.) It makes a beautiful New Year's "card."

A capital booklet by the late C. H. Spurgeon is Baptismal Regeneration. It has for some years been bearing its testimony against a pernicious error, and is in its 225th thousand. (1d. Passmore & Alabaster.)

His Unspeakable Gift is a New Year's address, by Rev. W. Rogers, LL.D., Whiteabbey, Belfast. (Religious Tract and Book Depot, 116, Royal-avenue, Belfast.) It sets forth the Gospel, and makes an urgent appeal to young people to receive Christ.

Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling, has issued twelve of Bishop Ryle's most striking evangelistic booklets. They are in packets of six. Among the titles are: "Are You an Heir?" "Have You a Priest?" "Shall You be Saved?" "Wheat or Chaff?" These are admirable series. (6d. per packet.)

Mr. J. Forbes Moncrieff's booklets, so pointed and useful, are welcome visitors year by year. He has just published the following Addresses to the Young, all of them excellent:—Our Idols (1½d. Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling); The Fisher and the Fowler (1½d. C. Glass & Co., Glasgow); Snares for the Simple (1d. J. & R. Parlane, Paisley); and How to be Happy (½d. Andrew Stevenson, Edinburgh).

Mr. J. E. Hawkins, 36, Baker-street, W., has issued the Golden Grain Almanac for 1896 in paper and cloth covers. In addition to daily texts, there are select poems by Mary Gorges and others. There is also a large-type edition (2d. and 6d.). With a Diary, bound in roan, with pockets, this is a useful vade-mecum (1s. 6d.). Mrs. Gorges has also written a New Year's Wish poem, "The Lord be with you," and a motto poem, "Be of Good Cheer," both of them printed on tinted paper with gilt borders.

HOMES OF HOPE,
Nos. 4-5-6, Regent-square, Grays Inn-rd., London, W.C.

This Society was established in 1860.
Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.
A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women before they become mothers as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.
The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal or contributions :—

1.—For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2.—For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would, in many cases, rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3.—For Law Expenses: in every case, if it be possible, the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent, and the Committee are in great distress for funds.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The important living of Houghton-le-Spring has been conferred upon Canon Norman, rector of Burnmoor.

A new mission hall and Institute was opened last week in connection with Trinity College Mission, Camberwell.

Archdeacon Denison, who entered upon his ninety-first year on Thursday, is said to be in rather feeble health.

Rev. J. Hughes-Games has refused the vicarage of Birkenhead. He has been offered the charge of St. Nicholas', Durham.

The charge of Easington, vacant by the death of Canon Chester, has been accepted by Canon Scott Moncrieff, vicar of Christ Church, Bournemouth.

Canon Benham concurs with many other clergymen in thinking that the time has now come to authorise the reading of the Revised Bible in churches.

The C.P.A. is proposing to make a special effort during next Lent, on behalf of home missions, Canterbury, Chichester, Oxford, Rochester, St. Albans, and Winchester.

Canon Honeyburne, vicar of St. Philemon's, Liverpool, succeeds Archdeacon Clarke as Vicar of Christ Church, Southport. He is regarded as a worthy successor to the late Archdeacon.

Commenting on the fact that, though Archdeacon Farrar resigned in July, Canon Eyton is not yet in residence at Westminster, "A Churchman" inquires in The Times "What is a reasonable interval between the departure of an incumbent and the effective arrival of his successor, and meanwhile who is responsible for the work of the parish?"

CONGREGATIONAL.

An eight days' mission has been held at Oakengates.

Rev. W. Douglas Reid has been recognised as pastor at Beverley.

Rev. E. Goodson has been recognised as pastor of Sandwich Church.

Rev. Henry E. Arkell has been recognised as pastor at Trinity Church, Catford.

Rev. Allen D. Jeffery has been welcomed to the pastorate at Clifton Church, Peckham.

A new chapel has been opened at Birmingham, with a sermon by Rev. W. A. Guttridge.

Rev. J. C. Neil, formerly of Mearns-street Church, Greenock, has been recognised as pastor at Hoylake.

The Canadian Congregational Union purposes inviting Rev. D. Burford Hooke to visit their churches in June.

The Congregational Fund Board, which at present consists of twelve churches, attains its bicentenary this year.

Rev. J. E. Fowler has accepted the secretariat of the Church-Aid Society. He will resign the secretaryship of the Recreative Evening Schools Association.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have decided that their Madagascar missionaries now on furlough shall return to their posts at as early a date after the New year as is consistent with safety in travelling.

Much sympathy is felt for Rev. R. D. and Mrs. Wilson, of Trinity Church, Poplar, on the loss of their younger son, Mr. Robert James Wilson, of Harrogate and the Leeds branch of the Bank of England. He leaves a wife and three children.

Rev. F. B. Meyer visited Worcester on Dec. 11, at the invitation of the Free Churches of the city. The conference was held in the Congregational Chapel, and consisted of an address to the Nonconformist ministers in the morning, to Christian workers in the afternoon, and to the general public at night. The universal feeling was that good resulted from the visit, but it wants to be succeeded by others.

Rev. Morley Wright originated a most remarkable and successful Christmas toy and clothing service at Lewisham High-road Church eleven years ago, and repeated the service each Christmas with increased interest and usefulness. Now that he has removed to Paddington Chapel, Marylebone-road, he is transferring the service to the West, and seeking to continue its beneficent work in the neighbourhood of his new sphere of labour. The date fixed is Saturday afternoon, Dec. 21, at four o'clock.

BAPTIST.

Rev. H. and Mrs. Patterson have left for India, after furlough in this country.

Rev. A. W. L. Barker, late of Evesham, has entered on the pastorate at Worthing.

Memorial-stones have been laid of a new chapel in course of erection at East Greenwich.

Rev. Morison Cumming, after a stay of six months in Hobart, has returned to England.

Rev. A. Woodward, formerly of Carrickfergus, has been welcomed to the pastorate at Oswaldtwistle.

Gresham Chapel, Barrington-road, Brixton, has been totally destroyed by fire, which occurred last week, after a tea-meeting had been held.

An open-air baptismal service was conducted at Scapegoat Hill, Stainland, on Sunday, when Rev. T. R. Lewis immersed ten male and fourteen female candidates.

Much to the regret of the church at Hawick, Rev. W. Seaman has resigned his pastorate after sixteen years' service. He has been appointed Agent of the Baptist Home Mission of Scotland.

The first anniversary of the Brighton-road Chapel, South Croydon, was held last week. At the public meeting on Tuesday, Dec. 10th, Dr. J. A. Spurgeon occupied the chair. The report stated that forty-three members had been added, and all the agencies of the church were flourishing.

On Monday evening a meeting was held in East Hill Baptist Chapel, Wandsworth, to bid farewell to Rev. J. W. Ewing on his removal to the pastorate of Peckham-rye Church. All the speakers expressed their high appreciation of Mr. Ewing's work and character, and wished him God-speed.

Rev. F. C Spurr will conduct mission services in connection with the Baptist Union—Maze Pond Chapel, Dec. 23-29, and Jan. 5; Buckingham Chapel, Clifton, Jan. 11-20; Watford, Jan. 25—Feb. 2; Canterbury, Feb. 8-17; Milnsbridge, Feb. 22—March 2; Kidderminster, March 7-16; Colchester, March 21-29.

On Monday, Dec. 9th, a public meeting was held in St. Paul's, Skegness, in connection with the East Midland Baptist Association, when the chair was taken by the pastor, Rev. George Goodchild, who quoted Knox's words that there should be a church in every parish and a Bible in every home. In Lincolnshire there are twenty-five Baptist churches, sixteen of which have a membership under 100. Addresses followed by Rev. G. H. Bennett and F. Norwood.

The annual church meeting was held at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, on Thursday, Dec. 12. The pastor (G. Wainwright) presided. The reports of the work were of a most encouraging character. The net increase in the membership for the year was 17, the number now on the books being 227. The Missionary Prayer Union reported continued success; and the Christian Endeavour Society told an encouraging story of much attempted and done for Jesus. The debt upon the building continues a very heavy one; but has not hitherto hindered the aggressive efforts of the people.

Calls.—Rev. S. Willis, of Whittlesea, to Chelmsford; Rev. W. Chambers, to Shoreham; Rev. H. McCale, to Woodstreet, Bilston; Rev. W. Maurice, of Shrewsbury, to Oakengates.

The Primitive Methodist Connexional Orphanage is full, fifty orphans being in residence.

Special services have been held at Park Church, Brighouse, in celebration of the centenary.

New chapels are being built at Boothferry (Goole), Nunhead, Bill Quay, Skelmanthorpe, and Crawley Down.

A mission has been conducted at Trinity Church, King's Lynn, by Revs. John Fleming and Henry Hope, the pastor. Good results are reported.

Mr. G. Whelton, Connexional evangelist, has held a mission at Weston-super-Mare, when about thirty persons professed religious decision.

The Wesleyan Chapel at Calcot, near Holywell, was struck by lightning on Friday week, and, with the severe wind blowing, completely demolished.

Mr. J. Moremon, the blind evangelist, has held a series of special services in Brunswick Chapel, Halifax, which have been attended with encouraging results.

An old chapel in Cross-street, New Brompton, which has been in disuse since the erection of the building in Arden-street, has been converted into a Gospel Temperance Hall.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Thain Davidson has announced that he cannot accept the duties of the Moderatorship.

Rev. A. Connell, we are glad to note, has promptly declined the call to St. Columba, Edinburgh.

The Presbytery has accepted with much regret the resignation of Rev. Henry Miller at Hammersmith.

Rev. John Watson's congregation, Sefton-park, Liverpool, have established a mission at Smithdown-gate.

A meeting of Sunday-school superintendents and secretaries was held in the lecture-hall of Regent-square Church on Tuesday week to consider, amongst other things, the advisability of establishing district Sunday-school Unions for the denomination.

The forward movement, carried on under the auspices of the Welsh General Assembly, held its meetings at Aberystwith last week. It was decided to form a women's branch of the movement. A temporary home for friendless and fallen girls is also proposed, young Christian women to be specially trained for rescue work.

Calls.—Rev. James Peddie, of Middlesbrough, to St. Andrew's, Birkenhead; Rev. James Lawson to Salford; Rev. E. Gillies, of North Uist, to Ardnamurchan; Rev. W. W. W. Barry to Clive-road, Cardiff.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

That the Manchester Conference has made a deep impression and greatly increased the responsibility of Friends, both The Friend and other literature are amply proving. The public eye has been directed at once to the weaker and stronger views of truth held by the Society, and the outcome will likely be an advance all along the line.

Great sympathy has been heartily extended by the British and Foreign Bible Society and by various Churches in connection with the martyred missionaries of Madagascar. The details of how the murders occurred have not yet come to hand, but the sufferings involved have illustrated the real union existing between missionary churches promoting Biblical truth among the heathen. The overruling Hand will make even this deep sorrow "work together for good" in promoting the kingdom.

There will be widespread regret at the decease on Friday last of Charles Gillett, of Banbury, Oxon, a member of a devoted family, and himself actively interested and engaged in extending the Redeemer's kingdom at home and abroad. He will be sadly missed, especially in connection with Gospel and educational work in Constantinople, where his daughter has for many years been a resident and missionary worker. Influenza, acting on an enfeebled constitution, caused death on Friday last at a comparatively early age.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Premises have been secured for Rescue Homes in Berlin, Christiana, and Turin.

The first issue of the Japanese War Cry has appeared. The work in that country is progressing favourably.

A burglar's wife in Lancashire, coming under the influence of Army meetings, confessed to the proceeds of robberies being concealed in her house.

General Booth met the New Zealand Premier and members of the Cabinet in a conference, as such a large building was placed at disposal for prisoners and the rescue work.

The Mayor of San Francisco and of San Jose have joined the Auxiliary League, as have also President Gordon, of Stamford University, and a recent candidate for the Governorship of the State of California.

Charlton, of Dinnington, a useful local preacher.—At Chingford, on 7th inst., Mr. J. H. Branscombe, well known as a leading Christian in Hackney.—At Greenmount, Bury, on 8th inst., Rev. J. D. Boyd, an earnest young Congregational minister.—At Yarmouth (I. of W.), Rev. George Quirk, aged seventy-two, rector of the parish.—At San Remo, on 10th inst., Rev. E. A. P. Gray, rector of Wallasey, near Liverpool.—At West Hartlepool, Mr. George Horsley, J.P., aged fifty-eight, a leading worker among the Methodists.—At St. Kilda, Melbourne, Hon. W. M. K. Vale, who for thirty years has occupied an influential position in the colony and amongst the Christian churches.—At Walthamstow, Mr. Walter Mines, aged twenty-eight, leader of the Walthamstow Mission.—At Hornsey-rise, on 8th inst., Rev. Edward Jukes, aged eighty-two, for many years a useful Congregational minister.—At Inchicore, Dublin, Mr. Wm. Cairns Irwin, a young man of blameless character, and a most devoted Christian worker.

THE CHILDREN'S HOMES

(REV. DR. STEPHENSON'S)

Maintain 930 children, of both sexes, from all parts of the country—belonging to all churches and to no church—of all ages, and on the sole ground of want, exposure, and moral peril. The Dean of Canterbury, Dr. J. H. Rigg, Sir Henry H. Fowler, Dr. Clifford, Mr. J. J. Colman, and many others support its claims. The support depends on voluntary contributions. Additional houses could readily be built if income were forthcoming to maintain them. Applications come in daily for necessitous cases. Contributions will be thankfully received by Rev. Dr. Stephenson, Bonner-road, London, N.E., or may be sent to the Publishers of "The Christian." Cheques crossed "City Bank."

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

All Friends of the Society who have not already paid are requested to send in their Subscriptions, Donations, or Collections, with as little delay as possible, as the Accounts for the year are about to be Closed, and thus oblige the Patrons and Committee.

THE

A HOME and SCHOOL

FOR

AND A

BELOVED FOUNDER, C. H. SPURGEON.

Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, President.

Rule of admission:—"The greatest need has the loudest voice, without regard to the class, creed, or locality."

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS A YEAR ARE REQUIRED IN FREEWILL OFFERINGS!

Address, THE SECRETARY, The Stockwell Orphan Homes, Clapham-road, London, S.W.; or to the Publishers of The Christian.

Nearly Five Thousand Rescued Waifs!

Where?

In "Dr. Barnardo's Homes," with their 84 Houses, and 24 Mission Branches.

Why were they admitted?

Because they were destitute; without any other condition, either as to age, sex, creed, birthplace, nationality, physical health, or money payment or guarantee. The doors are always open to receive such, day or night.

How are they trained?

The Boys are carefully taught in fourteen different handicrafts under competent instructors; the Girls are brought up in cottage life to domestic service. About 1900 also are boarded out in rural districts.

What becomes of them?

About 700 every year are, after training, emigrated to Canada and the Colonies—where already 8043 have been placed out with Farmers, or on the large Industrial Farm belonging to the Institutions. All the others are sent to situations throughout Europe or to sea.

How do they succeed in after life?

Splendidly! Over 98 per cent. of the 8043 Emigrants, for instance, have turned out satisfactorily.

At what rate are Destitute or Orphan Children admitted?

From 40 to 60 are admitted weekly throughout the year.

What is the Religious Basis of the Whole Work?

"Protestant, Evangelical, and Christian, but not Sectarian" is the religious motto of the Institutions. Their object is to lead all the Children to Christ Himself. The work is supported by all sections of Christendom. In its operations all Evangelical Christians may, and do, join hands.

How are the Children maintained?

Solely by the free-will offerings of Christ's servants throughout the world.

What do they cost?

£140 every day for food alone. But £16 per head per annum covers total cost.

Is there any special present need?

Yes; a deficit of Six Thousand Pounds exists at present on the income for 1895, as compared with the income for 1894, which ought to be made up before the end of the year, while the needs of the whole work are as great as ever.

Remittances will be gratefully acknowledged, if sent to the Treasurer, William Fowler, Esq.; to the Chairman of Committee, Samuel G. Sheppard, Esq.; to the Vice-Chairman, Howard Williams, Esq.; to the Bankers, London and South Western Bank (Bow Branch); or to the Founder and Director, Dr. Thos. J. Barnardo, at the address of the Homes, as below.

JOHN ODLING, Secretary.

CONSUMPTION.

THE GRAND OLD MEDICINE OF NEARLY 70 YEARS

has maintained its position as the first medicine in all Chest Complaints.

As a preventative of mischief, it should be taken at the first appearance of Cough or Cold. As a safeguard against Influenza, and in subsequent weakness of the lungs, it has been used with wonderful results.

Ministers and Public Speakers have declared it to be invaluable for hoarseness, and "Splendid for the Voice."

So, also, in Asthma, it has been the means of wonderful relief.

But the renown of this celebrated medicine in all these cases has been eclipsed by its success in cases of

PHTHISIS PULMONALIS, or CONSUMPTION, Aptly called the "Scourge of England."

Interviews with patients, new and old, by Mr. Congreve's Commissioner, are published every alternate week in most of the weekly journals.

Mr. Congreve's book on Consumption and Chest Diseases may be had post free for one shilling, from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

Congreve's Balsamic Elixir may be had of all Medicine Vendors, or direct from the Proprietor (see the book).

DISABLED MISSIONARIES' WIDOWS & ORPHANS FUND.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

This fund was formed to give support to aged and infirm Missionaries who after a long-life service—enriching the poorest of the poor with the unsearchable riches of Christ—are compelled to cease from their labours. Forty-four of these receive yearly grants of from £20 to £52, according to length of service. Fifty-six widows whose husbands died in the work—several from disease taken while visiting, and in some instances leaving families—receive grants of from £10 to £20 yearly. Among these true helpmeets to their husbands are those who work earnestly among the London poor.

Last Year this Fund was deficient by £110 0s. 10d.

The Committee earnestly ask you to cast generously into this part of our Lord's treasury, that these aged and worthy disciples and widows may for the present year have their needs supplied.

Owing to the Christmas holidays, this paper has been sent to press earlier than usual. Late donations and communications will be acknowledged in our next issue. That number will contain a farewell letter by Rev. Andrew Murray, an address by Pastor Theodore Monod, of Paris, portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. Williamson, of Belfast, an extract from an important new work by Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, and much other interesting matter.

Our fund for distribution among the London poor is very low. At this season the various missions of the Metropolis make special arrangements for meeting the needs of those among whom they labour. In past years our readers have generously helped in this effort, and we trust they will do so on the present occasion. Having partaken of the joys of Christmas, let us not forget to pass on portions to the sons and daughters of want.

The committee of the Baptist Missionary Society have resolved to hold a meeting for special prayer on behalf of foreign missions, on the morning of New Year's Day, at eleven o'clock, in the library of the Baptist mission house, Furnival-street, Holborn. Rev. W. J. Henderson, Joint Principal of the Bristol Baptist College, will preside and deliver an address. Not a few of the friends of the society, both in London and the country, are deeply impressed with the necessity of waiting upon the Lord for guidance and blessing at the present time, especially in view of the urgent and pressing need for a large increase in the staff of labourers.

The season of "peace on earth and good will to men" has unhappily been marred by the strange tidings from the United States. "War clouds between England and America" is a newspaper announcement that is as unwonted as it is unwelcome. We cannot for a moment entertain the idea that these two closely allied nations should draw the sword over a disagreement like that relating to Venezuela. Such a thing would be a disgrace to modern international diplomacy, and a deep dishonour to our common Christianity. We trust that the press of both countries will avoid inflammatory language, and that the new year will still be young when John Bull and Brother Jonathan are found shaking hands over a peaceful and righteous settlement of the dispute.

When peace was sent into the world by Jesus it had to be realised through righteousness and the diffusion of brotherly love. Mankind does not enter upon it without first having received a Christian spirit, and entered upon the practice of Christian duties. Peace is a fruit of some preceding things. "The work of righteousness shall be peace ; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever." The yearning of the nations for relief from the incubus of great armies and from the dread of terrible conflicts can only be satisfied through their acceptance in the first instance of the rule of the Prince of Peace.

At the close of the year it is natural and customary for us to look back as well as forward. In doing so, we should endeavour to attain the right point of view. There is nothing religious in mere retrospection or anticipation. There are many who glean nothing from the past except discouragement, and find nothing in the future save despair. The present is contrasted to its detriment with fanciful and often utterly unreal reminiscences of bygone years. "Sorrow's crown of sorrow"—the remembering of happier times is always worn by them. Nothing is as it was. Life has lost its earlier lights ; the sharp outlines of far-off troubles are blurred into a kind of sentimental beauty by the haze of time. and the hard and rocky present pathway of life seems repugnant by comparison. A murmuring discontent, therefore, is the only harvest they gather from the lost years. This unfits them for immediate duties and fills them with dread of the future.

This is not the Christian's true mood. To him the past is avenued with the memory of God's goodness. Memorials of Divine mercy crown every hill. The years look like a stairway, with many a broken step it may be, but leading ever upwards to the higher life. So the present is to him a vantage ground from which to gather many a lesson of encouragement and gratitude.

And the future—so often dark with fears or grey with monotony—will wear another aspect to the devout believer. Though he knows not "what a day may bring forth," he remembers that "his times" are in God's hands. His experience of Divine guidance in bygone times will colour the unknown years with rosy lights, and the rainbow of child-like trust will be as an arch beneath the darkest clouds, through which he will step forward undismayed. When these words reach our readers' hands they will be in the mood when past and future will be playing on their minds. May they lead them into such wise and gracious thoughts that they may commit all their ways unto Him who loves us all, and who will "never leave us, nor forsake us" if we build our trust on Him !

The year 1895 has been chequered and disturbed in many ways, but we have much, as a nation to be thankful for. Amid the scrambles of speculation and the disturbances wrought by an unexpected General Election, trade has shown quiet but steady signs of improvement. These closing weeks are shadowed by a great industrial dispute, and we are sorry to find that the well-meaning attempt of Lord James to bring the Clyde and Belfast masters and men to an understanding has so far come to nothing. Still, there is on the whole less pressing poverty and distress abroad than of late years. The sorrows of Armenia, too, under the diabolical despotism of the Turk, is a black cloud out of which the fierce lightnings of a terrible war may flash at any time. The country is growing more and more restless under the inactivity of the boasted "concert of Europe." But we believe that even this imminent danger will be over-ruled, and a way speedily found out of the deadlock without being plunged into the horrors of battle. Let the closing days of 1895 be devoted to earnest heartsearchings and prayers that God's Kingdom may come, and his holy will be done on earth.

The end of the year is a time for paying accounts and squaring everything up. At least, there should be a clear score then. It is said that some of the richest are the worst payers, partly, we suppose, because they are made careless by the knowledge that they are able to pay at any time, and partly because they become overbearing through the corrupting influence of wealth. Poor people can only get along, as a rule, by paying ready money. It would be a good thing for some other persons to enforce upon themselves the same rule. Customers ought not to need to be asked four times for the payment of a trifling sum, thus giving much needless trouble and annoyance. Besides, out of this deferred payment by some of the rich comes a good deal of unsoundness in business life. Business would be a pleasure instead of a worry, and profits an honourable return for invested capital and labour, if the golden rule were acted upon, instead of a sly device to recoup long credit.

The present education conflict seems likely to throw the enormous extent of High-Churchism into such relief and prominence as no mere writing or speaking could have done. The devices also by which it spreads itself are being laid bare. Not for many a day will the letter of a London school teacher to Rev. F. A. Gace and his reply be forgotten. She wanted some copies of his catechism, which is notorious for its Romanism and bigotry, and requested him to inform her how to enforce its teaching without getting herself into trouble, as she did not wish to lose her appointment. The answer was of the true Jesuitical order :—

> The best way of teaching the catechism, when the book cannot be conveniently employed, is to write down as many questions and answers as may be required for the day on a piece of paper, which can afterwards be destroyed—or, better still, to have both by heart, when they can be judiciously put to the children, who should know both the answer and the question which drew it forth.

The conflict will probably have far-reaching effects upon political parties and national policy. It is already turning away Nonconformists from the Irish party, because they see that the very existence of spiritual Christianity is involved. This feeling of alienation is almost sure to become deeper every day, now that open expression has been given to it. We are on the eve of remarkable changes, if the present signs mean anything.

England has been accustomed to boast until recently that infanticide was a crime which had almost disappeared from amongst us. We are awaking to the painful fact that it is one of the commonest in the land. Its prevalence in London has been often exposed at the police-courts, and now a doctor in long practice in the Midlands writes in a contemporary that his experience leads him to believe that among the poorest classes at least 25 per cent. of the infants who die have their deaths either hastened or brought about wilfully. He admits the extreme difficulty of proving his statement, but gives illustrations which are well calculated to excite more than suspicion. He is called to an infant who has died suddenly; he goes at once, and finds the body carefully arranged in bed, with a feeding-bottle half full of milk by its side. Yet it had signs of having been horribly neglected. It is not at all to our credit, but much to our shame, that a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children should be necessary; but as it undoubtedly is, great efforts are now being made to provide it with a large special fund.

Are there two classes of ministers—(1) the humdrum, the descendants of the priests who went through all kinds of manual drudgery, the men who attend the committees of societies and get up soup kitchens—(2) the prophetical, those who retire to the secret place and then come forth to preach the truth of God? There may be, in fact, but ought it to be so? Was not the Master one who blended the humdrum of feeding and healing and sympathising with the work of preaching? And did not the Apostles do the same? More actual work among men might give us better practical teaching and fewer vagaries in the Church.

Among other "ills that flesh is heir to" a correspondent complains of the overwhelming rush of "reports," magazines, and "organs," which are sent her every month by the twenty-five or thirty societies and missions to which she subscribes. She says:—

> Many of these are interesting to read one number; but as monthlies year in and year out, the contents have but little freshness. One cannot give them up entirely, as one likes to know how things go on, and I make a conscientious use of the whole by lending to servants, indoor and out, giving some to friends and distributing among villagers around. All of this entails much work. Many of these might just as well be issued quarterly, which would be a great saving of printing and postage to the societies, and the magazines themselves would contain more of interest. As it is, this monthly mass becomes a crushing burden. The mere time taken in opening and looking them through (not reading) deprives one of precious time that might be given to other helpful reading. I often believe it to be a device of Satan to keep God's people from their Bibles.

Our correspondent is paying the natural penalty of her generosity, but it is a heavy one, and her suggestion well merits the attention of mission and society secretaries. To achieve more real result at a third the present cost would be a great point gained.

No one can remain uninterested in the fate of the Armenians. Christians shudder and yet exult as they see fellow-believers tortured for the Gospel's sake, but not accepting deliverance, because they count it better to die in the faith and love of Christ than to live a perjured life. Humanity is put to shame by the well-authenticated stories of oppression and violence and bloodshed which come with a sickening monotony every few days. All are crying that something must be done. But what is the question which all seem to fail in answering. Something is going on in the diplomatic world of which we are not informed. There is so much suspicion among the huge military powers that one dare not stir for fear of another; and they will not combine; and they will not give a mandate to one of their number to act for the rest. The situation is painful in the extreme, and we can but look away from the selfish jealousies of the nations to God, who regardeth the cry of the poor and the oppressed, and who will one day make inquisition for blood wrongly spilt.

The dark deeds of white men in Africa will probably be disclosed at the trial of Captain Lothaire for the murder of Mr. Stokes. Truly anything worse than is alleged against some traders can hardly be conceived. It is a horrid imagination, or a still more horrid fact, that one officer in the Congo State required a thousand human hands as a penalty for failure to collect enough ivory or indiarubber. Mr. Leon Decla affirms this and similar things in an article in The New Review. For the sake, therefore, of their good name, if not for the sake of the poor natives, the Belgian Government will have to enforce a fair trial. They will be blamed as conspirators if they allow any trickery. One way or the other the incident of Mr. Stokes's death must do good.

"An Orphan" gives a sad picture in The Daily News of the condition of women in South Africa. One sentence suggests a depth of iniquity from which one shrinks back in horror. After describing the difficulties she and her sister, ladies, had in finding lodgings in Johannesburg, she says:—"These people cannot imagine a woman alone can possibly be good in this place." Her misery in anticipation of the glad season of Christmas is most touchingly expressed:—"I must go and stop somewhere in my Christmas holidays, and I positively dread asking anyone to take me in!" That is the kind of thing civilisation without Christ is—that is the kind of society which you get when men come together to heap up riches. The place is like a Moloch; "many young women"—the orphan fears—"who would have remained good and pure at home, are unable to pass through such a fire as this, scatheless."

The Commissioners of Prisons have done a good thing in deciding to make Her Majesty's Prison, Wormwood Scrubs, a prison for the reception of first offenders, convicted in the Metropolitan area. The object of this decision is to keep first offenders strictly apart from the contaminating influences of the habitual criminals. The deterioration from contact with old offenders is rapid and great, and therefore anything to give first offenders another chance must be hailed as a blessing. The contemplated change will touch an enormous population.

It is a good sign of a quickened conscience that some of our legislators when they receive office as ministers in the Government resign their places as directors in commercial companies. They do right to give their time to the posts for which they are receiving salaries from the nation, and right to place themselves beyond the reach of temptation to use one position to aid the other; and right to keep public officials from the possibility of being charged with corruption.

In the school of Jesus Christ only one great test question is put to would-be disciples and workers, "Lovest thou Me?" Other things may be very good in their way, but the supreme qualification for everyone who has to feed either young or old with the true bread which has come down from heaven is love to the Saviour. This sanctifies every gift and every attainment, and becomes a never-failing source of suggestion and inspiration. The ingenuity, the endurance, the patience, the enterprise which are born of love pass all measurement.

When a sinner who has wronged his fellowmen is converted, he is bound to make restitution; no doubt this is done in many cases without a word of publicity. Now and again, however, striking cases come before the public, such as that of the wife of a Bolton burglar, who has told where her husband, now in prison, hid the spoils of two burglaries. "How is it," said a tradesman to some customers who had always before been in his debt, "that you now pay so regularly?" Their religion, was their reply. At any rate, his religion ought to make a man scrupulously honest and truthful, both of them excellent qualities, which wear as well in the market as they look beautiful in private.

REV. W. H. AITKEN IN CANADA.

In a very interesting letter to the secretary of the Church Parochial Mission Society, Rev. W. H. Aitken recounts some of the experiences of himself and his co-workers on their Canadian mission. He says:—

Taking a review of the work at Montreal, I should say that according to my best judgment it would compare favourably with any mission that we held during our pre-visit to America, unless, perhaps, one were to except that at New Orleans, where a very remarkable work was done. But the applications for Memorial Cards led me to think that while a good many had been led to decide for Christ, perhaps the greatest work of the mission had been the quickening of believers, and the raising of many of the Lord's people to a higher level of faith and service.

It is a far cry from Montreal to Halifax, and it was near midnight when we reached this city on the Friday night. We have not yet finished our mission work here, but we have already seen enough to fill our hearts with praise and thanksgiving. It has, indeed, been a remarkable work of God's grace that we have been allowed to witness, and I attribute it, under God, to the fact that the bishop and the clergy have been all so unanimous in the effort. All party distinctions have been forgotten in the united attempt to win souls for the Master. The morning services have been held at St. Luke's, and they have been very well attended, but the mission services at night have been held at St. Paul's, where there have been very large congregations, and night by night many have been seeking for pardon and peace.

Mrs. Crouch and Miss Ryder have been much encouraged in their work amongst the women; their meetings have been well attended, and the apparent results have been very gratifying. It is with much regret that we find ourselves nearing the end of our time here, for it seems as if the harvest were greater than we can reap in the few hours that remain to us. We hope your readers will continue instant in prayer in our behalf, especially for the work at the capital, Ottawa, where we shall be commencing our work about the time that this report is in the hands of your readers.

SOWING.

Look to thy basket, what are thy seeds?
Many are sowing the bitterest weeds,
Over their harvests the careless will weap,
What a man soweth that shall he reap.

Liberally, freely, scatter the grain,
Sure is the harvest, wide is the plain,
Leave no field empty, or fallow, for know
Where a man soweth his harvest will grow!

Forward each footstep, look not behind,
To this one duty give thy whole mind,
Jesu's approval is waiting for thee,
As a man soweth his harvest will be!

E. E. Trusted.

Recognition in Heaven.

By Rev. WM. CROSBIE, Nottingham.

The question, "Shall we know our friends in heaven?" is frequently asked, and not out of mere curiosity. Many a time it has been put to me, amid scenes of sorrow, and in circumstances touching and unforgettable. It has a tender interest for every one of us. There is no heart that is not moved and deeply stirred by the inquiry.

I have selected several passages of Scripture that throw light on the profoundly interesting subject. Little, comparatively, is revealed; nothing direct and positive. There is no plain categorical answer to the question. Nor do the Scriptures in any way argue the matter. But neither do they argue the existence of God, the immortality of the soul, and some other great facts. These are assumed, or implied, or simply stated; never, by process of reasoning, demonstrated. And man generally believes in them. The belief is written, by the finger of God, on the deep, inward tablets of the soul.

And such the answer to this question seems to be. It is one of those primitive, universal beliefs that belong to us, by nature, as spiritual and immortal beings, inherent essentially in our very make. The Scriptures, therefore, assume, or imply, or simply state it, without any formal argumentation, or any positive, dogmatic affirmation. The first two passages I cite are from the Old Testament—Deut. xxxii. 49-50, and 2 Sam. xii. 22, 23.

To Moses God said, "Get thee up into this mountain Abarim, unto Mount Nebo, which is in the land of Moab, that is over against Jericho; and behold the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel for a possession; and die in the mount whither thou goest up; and be gathered unto thy people, as Aaron thy brother died in Mount Hor, and was gathered unto his people." "Gathered unto thy people"! That could not refer to the body of Moses, or to the body of Aaron, for the body of neither of them was buried with the bodies of their people, but apart and alone; and the body of Moses no one knew where it was laid. The reference, therefore, must be to the spirits of Moses and Aaron—to their immortal and essential selves; they were "gathered unto their people," unto their spiritual kindred, unto Abraham and Isaac and Jacob. Does not this call up sweet visions of happy meetings, and re-unions, and renewed and perfected friendships?

In the second passage, David said, "While the child was yet alive, I fasted and wept, for I said, who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live? But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him; but he shall not return to me." "I shall go to him"! I cannot at all think that David meant simply that he would die as his child had died, and his body be buried where his child was buried. There would have been poor comfort in that for David's bereaved and stricken heart. But we learn from the context that David was greatly comforted. He must have been comforted, therefore, with the hope of re-union with his child in heaven. The words, "I shall go to him," can scarcely, with anything like a satisfactory reason, be regarded as other than the triumphant outburst of that hope:—

> The father's arms (and the mother's arms)
> Again are folded round the child he loved
> And lost. Old sorrows are forgotten now,
> Or, but remembered to make the sweet hour
> That overpays them; wounded hearts that bled
> Or broke, are healed for ever. In the room
> Of this grief-shadowed present, there shall be
> A Present in whose reign no grief shall gnaw
> The heart, and never shall a tender tie
> Be broken."

Turning to the New Testament, I cite words from Luke's Gospel: "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the Kingdom of God, and ye yourselves thrust out" (xiii. 28). There is knowledge, there is recognition there, I think:—"Ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the Kingdom of God."

There is another passage of similar import: "I say unto you, that many shall come from the east, and from the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdom of heaven" (Matthew viii. 11). The life of heaven, then, is a social life, fulfilling the perfect social ideal; and a legitimate inference from the fact is that, being a social life, a characteristic of it is knowledge and recognition one of another.

Consider, too, the record of the Transfiguration. At the Transfiguration two illustrious personages were present, Moses and Elijah. And they were known as Moses and Elijah. The three disciples knew them. How they came to know them we are not told. They were not named. They must have known them by a kind of spiritual intuition. The three disciples came within the play of the elevating and ecstasy-producing influences of the Transfiguration. Their very drowsiness was proof of it. There was repression and depression of the physical nature by the glory; and the spiritual nature was quickened, energised, exalted, and made ecstatic, so that it saw and knew, as they see and know in the great and blessed spirit-realm.

My next reference is to the Risen Christ. He is the type and pattern of what we shall be. And after his resurrection there was knowledge and recognition of Him. Some of the relationships between Him and the disciples were changed, or rather, perhaps, purified and perfected. But He was essentially the same Christ. The marks of his identity were upon Him, visible some of them to the eye of sense, while others were visible only to the perceptions and intuitions of the spirit. The disciples knew Him, and the familiar and precious intercourse of the former days was renewed, but, somehow, touched, and transfigured, and glorified.

One other appeal to Scripture I make: and let it suffice. Paul, in his First Epistle to the Thessalonians, says: "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye, in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ, at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy" (1 Thessalonians ii. 19). These words, I hold, are an affirmative answer, were there no other, to the question, Shall we know our friends in heaven? How could those Christian people at Thessalonica be Paul's "joy and crown of rejoicing in the presence of the Lord Jesus, at his coming," if he did not know them? I see not how they could. The argument, from this Scripture, for recognition, seems conclusive. It is evident Paul believed he would know his converts again; and he looked forward, with keen and eager delight, to meeting them on the great day of the Lord, and being able to say, "Here am I, and the children Thou hast given me"!

The Scriptures, then, so far as they bear on the subject, teach re-union and recognition in the world that is to be. What answer they furnish to the question, Shall we know our friends in heaven? is in the affirmative. The veil is lifted only a little; but we see within the joyous mansions of the Father's House the faces of the dear ones who have left us; and their bliss and ours will be consummated when we meet again, when "with the morn, those angel-faces smile, which we have loved long since, and lost awhile."

And the testimony of the Scriptures accords with the instinct of the human heart. And that instinct, too, is God's revelation; especially the instinct of the regenerate and holy soul.

And reason's verdict does not differ, but is similar. The rational view of the future state is that it is developed naturally from the present—that it grows from the present—that we are essentially in that future what we are in this present—that we retain our individuality, our identity, our memory—that the chain of continuity is not severed by death—that we know ourselves there to be the same persons that we were here. And if that be so, if individuality, and identity, and memory are retained, we shall know each other. If, on the contrary, individuality, and identity, and memory are not retained, nothing really is retained. To all intents and purposes we are wholly different beings—new beings—entered for the first time, so far as conscious reminiscence goes, upon the career of existence. Practically it is so. And, in that case, what becomes of gratitude—gratitude for salvation, and for all the mercies of the past? And what becomes of judgment, and the Judgment Day? Where are the materials of the Judgment? Can there be any judgment, or any Judgment Day? And how shall redemption's song be sung, "Unto Him that loved us, and loosed us from our sins by his blood; and He made us to be a Kingdom, to be priests unto his God and Father; to Him be the glory and the dominion for ever and ever"?

There must be, I maintain, the retention of individuality, identity, and memory, in the future; otherwise we are landed in all sorts of inexplicable absurdities and confusions. And upon the basis of individuality, identity, and memory, as upon a solid natural foundation, Reason builds a beautiful, heart-consoling, and heart-satisfying doctrine of re-union and recognition.

We have all of us friends in heaven—beloved friends—and we have learned this morning that, if we ourselves are Christ's, we shall meet those friends again, and shall know them. Husband and wife (but no longer as husband and wife, for they are like the angels), parent and child, brother and sister, teacher and scholar, pastor and flock, friend and friend, shall meet again, and heart will be pressed to heart, and hands clasped in joy unspeakable; and, while some of the old relationships will be dropped and lost, others will remain, exalted, purified, and immortalised; and new selective and elective affinities will emerge and operate, forming the assemblies of the blessed into groups, and associations, and companionships, answering to the many-mansioned Home. Not only shall we know those who were dearest to us on earth, but the great and good of all the ages, the ancient patriarchs and prophets, the apostles and leaders of the Church, the writers of the enduring literatures of the world, the heroic souls that created new epochs in history, the martyrs who died for the truth: we shall know them all, and shall have intercourse with them all; we shall "sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the Kingdom of God."

"RESTORED AND KEPT."

Having read the letter headed "Restored and Kept," in your issue of December 12, with great interest, I feel led to write a few words to "E. C.," to tell her that "his word which is her stay and comfort, and was the message of balm and healing to her," is strong enough to keep off any return of mania. I have seen many an attack of acute mania warded off by simply standing on the Word of God. "The Holy Ghost who shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance," will lead her to the special promise suited to her need, and she has only to put her foot down on it and never to stir from it however she feels, and she will find the Lord faithful.

While on earth He immediately healed any lunatic who was brought to Him, and it is not his will that any Christian should suffer in that way, it is not to his glory, for, "Ye are fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; an holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God, through the Spirit."

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you—for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

"What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? for ye are bought with a price: therefore, glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."

"When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace: but when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils."

"Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong: because he hath poured out his soul unto death."

So we see that through the atonement, "the strong man" has been overcome by "a stronger than he;" "his armour wherein he trusted" has been taken from him, and he has no further right or power, if we stand on our rights.

Praise God, there is no limit to His power, as we have proved for years past; there is no lunatic too hard for Him to deliver, as we know by experience, and all this by simple faith in his word.

And so our dear sister will see that "the fact" lies on the other side, and that "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us."

"And now we cease not to give thanks for her... that the eyes of her understanding being enlightened...she may know what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe."

I have been much interested in reading the short article under the above heading in The Christian. I have a fellow-feeling with the writer, inasmuch as I know something in my own experience both of the dread affliction to which she refers, and of the wonderful restoration that was vouchsafed to me, in answer, as I verily believe, to the persevering and believing prayers which were offered up by God's people in my behalf. I have been told since my recovery that hundreds of prayers were offered up for me during the time that I was absent from home, and I record this for the encouragement of such as may have friends who are similarly afflicted, that they may be unceasing in their prayers for them.

In my own case, which, though it was regarded as almost hopeless, was not of such long duration as that of the writer, the recovery was most wonderful and rapid, and it might truly be said, "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." I can also say with the writer that nothing but a realisation of the grace of the Lord Jesus, and of his preciousness as "the Lord our Righteousness," my "hiding place and my shield," affords me comfort and hope for the unknown future; and I desire to exercise unshaken confidence that He who has been so good and gracious to me in the past will keep me in faith, and hope, and love even unto the end.

TO BUSY WORKERS.

Let my beloved come into his garden and eat his pleasant fruits.—Sol. Song, iv. 16.

In these hurrying days, there are many who find it difficult to take leisure for the cultivation of spiritual life. The business, the home, and even the sphere of Christian service have each their claim upon the hours of the day and of the night; and where is that necessary time for quiet communion and study of the Word without which the Christian life is but a stunted growth? "They made me keeper of the vineyards, but mine own vineyard have I not kept" (Sol. Song i. 7) is the sorrowful experience of many. Yet, in figure, the Lord calls, "Rise up, my fair one, and come away" (ii. 10); "Let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice" (ii. 14). Only by constant communion with Him can we cultivate in our lives those "pleasant fruits" for our "Beloved" to enjoy when He comes into his garden.

'Tis not thy work the Master wants, but thee.

Let us, in his presence, examine ourselves, and see if we are growing the "fruit of the Spirit" (Gal. v. 22, 23).

1. Love.—That love which is "shed abroad in our hearts" (Rom. v. 5), which Jesus speaks of as "my love"—"continue ye in my love" (John xv. 9); which can be seen by the world. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John xiii. 35); which must extend to our enemies, "love your enemies" (Matt. v.). Is this fruit growing? Is it "very good?" or is it dwarfed and withered by selfishness, jealousy, envy, etc., bringing discredit on the Lord we profess to love and serve?

2. Joy.—The most tender fruit of the Spirit, sheltering between love and peace. "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full" (John xv). It soon withers and fades under a blast of discontent and murmuring, but with his abiding presence there is fulness of joy (Ps. xvi. 11). This is unspeakable joy (1 Pet. i. 8). This joy is the Christian's strength (Neh. viii. 10). Are we taking care of this fruit, so that when the Lord enters his garden He will be able to pluck it whichever way he turns? Joy on one side, because of his great salvation; on another, because He has power to keep; on another, because He ever liveth to make intercession for us; on another side, because He is coming to reign.

3. Peace.—"My peace I give unto you." It is a plant of the Lord's own planting. "It passeth all understanding." "Shall keep [or garrison] your hearts and minds." It is easily destroyed by worry, anxiety, fretting, and distrust. Peace is the sweetest of all fruits, and sheds a holy calm on all around. "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing."

4. Longsuffering.—This is an off-shoot of love, for love "suffereth long and is kind." Impatience is its great enemy. "Be patient, therefore, brethren unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain" (Jas. v. 7). "Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction and of patience." When the Lord comes to his garden, will He be able to enjoy this fruit?

5. Gentleness.—A fruit belonging especially to Christ, seen in his every action; St. Paul speaks of the "gentleness of Christ" (2 Cor. x. 1), and David says in Ps. xviii. 35, "Thy gentleness hath made me great". St. Paul tells us, in 1 Tim. ii. 24, "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men." The Master is gentle; so should also his servants be. This fruit is so often overrun with weeds, such as unkind and hard words and deeds, that the worldly man says that Christians are not any better than he is, and so he is content to shelter under such an excuse, and go on in sin. May this fruit so abound in us that those with whom we come in contact may see that we are different, and so bring honour and glory to our beloved Lord and Master.

6. Goodness.—An active fruit; an offshoot of love; for it is really love in action. Jesus "went about doing good" (Acts x. 38). So should we, not for praise of men, but for the "well done" of the Master. "Be not weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." Will the Lord be able to enjoy this fruit, or will He find it dying because of sloth and indolence?

7. Faith.—If this is overgrown with weeds, or neglected, the other fruits must languish; for the enemy is always on the alert to destroy or choke the fruits of the Spirit. Our Lord showed this fruit; his enemies tauntingly said "He trusted in God." This fruit "overcomes the world" (1 John v. 4); by it we can "quench the fiery darts of the wicked" (Eph. vi. 16). It grows abundantly by feeding on God's Word (Rom. x. 17). May the heart of our Lord rejoice when He comes to his garden at finding faith strong and flourishing. "Lord, increase our faith."

8. Meekness.—This fruit can only flourish as we sit at the feet of Jesus and learn of Him (Matt xi. 29). A precious fruit in the eyes of the Lord; in his sight of great price (1 Pet. iii. 4). It is opposed to the teaching of the world, and is quickly choked by such weeds as self-interest, assertion of "our rights," etc. How much the Lord promises to those who are bearing this fruit; satisfaction (Ps. xxii. 26), guidance (Ps. xxv. 9), an inheritance (Ps. xxxvii. 11, Matt. v. 5), lifting up (Ps. cxlvii. 6), made beautiful with salvation (Ps. cxlix. 4).

9. Temperance.—St. Peter places this between knowledge and patience, and there only can it flourish. Knowledge puffeth up, but with knowledge and patience temperance can grow. Even in "striving for the mastery" we must be "temperate in all things," in eating, in drinking, in words and actions.

Let us, as our Lord bids us, "watch and pray," so that we may be able to say with joy and rejoicing, "At our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved (S.S. vii. 13).

SAILORS' REST, DUNKERQUE.

Three years ago four Christian seamen met in a small room in a quiet street of the quaint old Flemish town of Dunkerque, to hold a conference with God about a Sailors' Rest and Bethel on the dock side. The place was growing in commercial importance, whilst the temptations for sailors also increased with awful rapidity and deadly effect. Through an appeal in The Christian funds were sent in, and within three months the Sailors' Rest and Bethel was opened on the Quai Freycinet, in answer to the prayer of those four seamen.

For three years the Lord has sustained and blessed the work. One of the most important items is the almost daily visitation of the vessels in port, and the distribution of Gospel literature. The practical earnest preaching of the simple Gospel at the Bethel has been blessed to many a soul; whilst the Gospel Temperance meetings have proved turning points in the life of many a young sailor.

For some time we have felt the place "too strait for us," but have searched in vain for premises more suitable. We made it a matter of prayer that, if we gave up these rooms a more suitable place might open up, and a month ago a house was offered in a splendid position near the dock gates. Exactly suited to our need, this house will enable us to have a coffee-bar and reading-room on the ground floor, with a large mission-room above. We have secured these premises at an extra cost in rent of £10 per annum, which is trifling compared with the advantages gained. To cover the expenses of fitting up coffee-bar and mission room, the sum of £100 is required, and we believe that the Hand that has fully supplied every need for the last three years, will not fail us in this new effort.

THE DOCKER AND THE SCEPTIC.

I was interrupted, while addressing a body of men, by a sceptic—a stranger—exclaiming, "Look here, men, don't be gulled into believing anything this missionary has been saying. Religion is all Mother Hubbard, and Christianity is played out, yer know. Why, it had to be supported by miracles done, or said to be done, among a foreign people, and in a remote period, and—— "

"Hold on a bit. You talk about religion not being true, and Christianity being played out; you tell us not to be 'gulled' by Mr. D——. Now, it strikes me, if there is any 'gulling' at all, it is you who is trying it on, not him. Who he is we all know; but who you are, Mr. Sceptic, we've got to learn."

"Played out, sir, played out."

"Christianity is played out, is it? Well, I can't go into figures, but I have a very strong opinion that there is more true Christianity among us dock chaps to day than ever there was. Is 'Christianity played out,' mates?'" Several voices, "No! No! It's being played in, bless the Lord."

"What do you mean by 'true Christianity?'"

"A portable religion, sir, that rules our lives—not only on Sunday, but all through the week; not only in church, but also in the workshop. A religion we can carry about with us, being a 'new creature in Christ Jesus.' Hands up, mates, a testimony for Jesus!" when up went eight or nine hands. "No, no, sir! 'Christianity is not played out' here. It may be, and perhaps is, 'played out' in your infidel halls."

"Miracles, sir; what have you got to say about miracles? Why were they not done after the death of Christ? Take away the miraculous, and Christianity will not have a leg to stand upon, and——"

"Steady, there; steady will you? You are running it off the reel a little too fast. If you will only read your New Testament without blinkers on, you will find many miracles recorded in the Acts of the Apostles as having been done after our Lord's death, and in his name."

"But I don't believe in miracles."

"Perhaps not; though I am not so sure about that."

"Why are they not performed to-day? Tell us that."

"They not only can be performed now, but they are constantly taking place among us. Listen. I will relate the history of a man standing here. He won't mind, and you may rely on its being a true picture—a miracle."

"Oh, let's hear that."

"Two years ago he used to spend his evenings in a public-house with boon companions. He was given to cursing, swearing, and filthy conversation, and when he had about as much beer as he could carry he staggered home. Oh, what a home! It was the home of a drunkard. The children would hide away out of his sight. His wife trembled as she laid his supper, amid his oaths and curses. He found fault with his food; it was not good enough for him. She remonstrated with him for wasting his money instead of giving it for the support of home and children. He got exasperated, and ended by flinging the plate at her head, and followed it up by kicks and blows. He was a curse to himself, a terror to his family, and a nuisance to the neighbours. But the scene has changed. Look on this picture. On leaving work this man now goes, not to the public-house, but home. Home made bright and well furnished. No drunken associates, no cursing, no swearing, no filthy talk. He is happy and cheerful, and the children run to meet him. He takes the youngest up and lifts him on to his shoulders. His wife greets him with a smile and cheery welcome. Again the scene changes. It is night. He takes down a well-thumbed book, gives out a hymn, and they all sing—

My God, the spring of all my joys,
The life of my delights,
The glory of my brightest days,
The comfort of my nights.

The old Book, the family Bible, comes out. A portion of it is read. He prays for himself, his wife, and his children. Now, the turning of this bad man into a God-fearing man, a loving husband, and a tender father—what is it? Give it a name."

"I don't know."

"Well, I do. It is a miracle of saving grace. Nor is it an isolated case. They are to be found all over London, and are the 'To-day miracles.'"

"I was a Christian once, but after hearing the late Mr. B—— lecture, I gave it up."

"Me and my mates often sing, 'I left it all with Jesus long ago.' What do you sing? I 'left it all with B—— long ago, eh!'" Here the bell rang, and the meeting was quickly broken up, our sceptical friend going away, muttering something about fools and fanatics, having had as much as he expected, and, perhaps, a trifle more than he bargained for. —City Mission Magazine.

NORTH-WEST INDIA.

Mr. Herbert Francis, preaching for the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, writes from Dehra Doon, in the North-west Provinces, under date October 28:—"I have just returned from an interesting journey, visiting needy stations with the Gospel. People seemed very ready to be spoken with everywhere. One young ticket collector said he would like to give himself to God and become a missionary. I was away eight days, and had several meetings, but spoke personally with a great number, nearly all employed on the Great N.-W Railway line of the Punjab. I was asked to preach to a native congregation. A bill was struck off, saying I would lecture in English in the Bayar Church of Ludhiana. A great crowd came of clerks, those holding Government appointments, and even judges, secretary of corporation, etc., about 300. I was asked to send a note for the police to come, as it was thought there would be a disturbance. None came, and none were needed. I spoke for about fifty minutes on 'the Truth of the Bible.' I had better attention than we often get in tent services at home. They said, 'Come every night.' I asked a native how many understood me. He said 'All.' Praise the Lord. You may say to any true evangelist who is filled with the Spirit and knows his Bible, 'Go, and the Lord be with you.' This can be done in any large station. I am told that the people generally are losing faith in their own religion.

"At Amritsar, the great centre of native worship, where the great golden temple is, I had a splendid meeting for railway men and others. Nearly all the men I spoke to were anxious; so along the line for nearly 700 miles we sought to take a living Saviour by word, and books, sermons, tracts, etc. These men, working on the line from morning till night (and at this season double time) were literally hungry for the time to read. I hope in a week or two to take another journey in the interest of the Lord and the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society."

B. AND F. SAILORS' SOCIETY.—During the recent gale in Falmouth Harbour, the energetic missioner of this society was knocked out of his small boat by an incoming ship. He was rescued from his perilous position by the captain. A lady at St. Leonard's-on-Sea has offered to present a larger and safer mission boat, as an in memoriam gift, to bear the name of her late husband. The directors have gratefully accepted this thoughtful and generous offer, and a permanent boat fund is started to bear the increased annual expenditure involved in a larger mission boat, fit to take the water in any weather. Last year new premises were given to the mission, including reading-rooms, an attractive hall, etc., and this year a missionary's cottage, situated on the quay, was given by a gentleman and his family as a thank-offering.

THE LATE W. P. LOCKHART.

We recently noticed the life story of Mr. W. P. Lockhart, as compiled by his wife.* The following extracts will give some idea of the varied interest of the letters and other notes by Mr. Lockhart that are woven into the narrative. In an account of twenty-five years' preaching, Mr. Lockhart has the following remarks on

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

"To go back to 1861-2, we found in those days that open-air preaching was a great means of reaching the masses of the population, as, indeed, it is still. It must never be neglected. It is one of the most important works Christian men can ever engage in. In connection with open-air preaching, I wish to name one form of effort which may sound strangely in the ears of the younger portion of my audience, viz., preaching at executions. Executions used to be public; happily that is now changed. In those days enormous crowds gathered to see the awful sight of a fellow-creature passing into eternity. The crowds consisted of the very scum of the population, but they were strangely awed by the thought of the terrible scene they had come to witness.

"Often have I and others—among them the zealous Sumners, now called away to his rest—stood just under the gallows reading the Scriptures and pointing the crowds to Christ; pleading with them to repent and believe the Gospel. If I remember rightly, the last time when I preached on such an occasion was the last public execution that took place in Liverpool. It was in September, 1863, and four men, sailors, I think, were hanged. The crowd was enormous; the papers estimating it at 100,000. It was therefore only a question of how far one's voice could reach. People always listened, seemed at times solemnised, sometimes even tears were seen glistening in the eye, but I never heard of any definite result. Yet, who knows?"

AT BARNET CONFERENCE, 1863.

Writing after his second visit to Barnet Conference, in 1863, Mr. Lockhart said: "We had a glorious time of it. I was so happy, and got so much blessing to my soul. There was such a hallowed sense of the presence of Jesus Himself, that I think all must have been blessed. Many spoke—dear Mr. Pennefather, of course often, and always to profit. I never before realised so much, 'Out of the belly of him that believeth shall flow rivers of living water.' Truth and love seemed so to flow from his very soul. It was not only the public addresses; there were many Bible readings, at which much precious truth was brought out, prayer meetings, conference meetings about different departments of the Lord's work, &c. The private talks too, with various saints, were very helpful. Altogether it was a season long to be remembered."

CRICKET AND PREACHING.

Mr. Lockhart sought exercise in the summer by cricket and open-air preaching. Once he wrote: "I shall be playing cricket to prepare for Sunday duty." One of his letters to his wife in 1865 reports a cricket match and an open-air service on the same evening. "We won our match in grand style last night. I send you a paper, and you'll see that your husband again added something to the score. It was tight work getting to Rock Ferry, for the match only finished at a quarter to seven; so I had just time to dress, jump into a cab, and drive straight to the place of meeting. Got there just at half-past seven, and had such a very blessed and solemn meeting. Spoke from 2 Cor. viii. 9, and the Lord helped me very much to set forth Jesus in the dignity and glory of his Godhead, and in the humiliation and agony of his suffering. How rich and yet how poor!"

NEVER DESPAIR!

In 1892 he wrote:—"The old Gospel is rather at a discount just now, and many are the difficulties on every hand. We must just cast ourselves more and more upon God, and seek his strength. We must not despair. It is a testing time, as if God were watching to see who among his children will stand fast. There will be a revival of old Puritan doctrine before long; of that I am sure, though you and I may not live to see it. God will yet stretch out his hand, and vindicate his own Truth.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 29.

"They will turn away thy son from following Me."—Deut. vii. 4.

The question of marriage is repeatedly considered in these chapters, and never once is it suffered that the Israelites might bring a heathen partner to the faith of God's elect; but it is always insisted that the heathen husband or wife will subvert the faith of the child of Abraham. "Thou shalt not make marriages with them, for they will turn away thy son from following Me, that they may serve other gods."

The same law holds still. You may suppose that by marrying the ungodly and irreligious you will be able to convert them to your way of thinking; but you must remember that regeneration is the work of the Holy Ghost, and he is not likely to lend his aid in regeneration whilst you are acting in defiance of his distinct prohibitions. The command of Christ is so clear and positive against his children entering into an unequal yoke with unbelievers, that it simply leaves no option for the obedient.

In order to make these marriages impossible, Israel was bidden to destroy the nations of Canaan. Separation from their society and practices was thus enforced. The slaughter seemed ruthless, but there was no other way of preserving intact the chosen race, as a peculiar people unto the Lord. Our separation also must be strict even to the extreme. If we would keep our young people from worldly alliances, we must begin with their amusements and companionships. There should be every endeavour to promote their happiness and interests, but we must very carefully guard the young plants from the blight of worldliness.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 30.

"He suffered thee to hunger."—Deut. viii. 3.

There was a Divine intention, then, in the hunger and thirst, and weariness of the desert march. God suffered these hardships to come to the chosen people, in order to teach them dependence on Himself. The daily gift of manna was a perpetual evidence of his loving thought and care for the pilgrim host; they came to learn that sin and backsliding could not alienate his compassions; they found that the Word of God was life. But none of these lessons could have been acquired if the supplies of food had been as regular and plentiful as in Egypt. They were suffered to hunger that God might make them know.

You are suffered to hunger for human love that you may know what the love of Jesus can be to his own. Open your heart to it, until it flood you as the sunshine does the south windows of a house.

You are suffered to hunger for recognition and gratitude, that you may know what the "Well done" of Jesus is, and to lead you to look for that only. What do the words of men amount to unless He smile?

You are suffered to hunger for easier circumstances, for money, that you may know the tender provision which Jesus can make for those who are wholly dependent on Him. In the absence of all human help, you will learn the sweet taste of his manna.

Glory to God, to God, he saith,
Knowledge by suffering entereth.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 31.

"Not for thy righteousness."—Deut. ix. 5.

It is well to be reminded that we have no claim on God. All He does for us and gives us is of his own free grace. By grace have we been saved, through faith, and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God. There certainly was nothing in us to merit eternal life, before our conversion; and it is equally sure that there has been nothing since to merit the continuance of his favour. Indeed, as we remember and review the past, to us belong shame and confusion of face for our repeated acts of disobedience,

If we were not saved for our goodness we shall not be lost for the lack of it.—When we have been betrayed into sin, in the keenness of our remorse, the fear is suggested lest God should put us utterly away. And there would be ground for the fear if we had been chosen because of our righteousness.

But since our acceptance with God does not depend on works of righteousness which we have done, but on his mercy in Jesus Christ it will not be undone by our failures. This thought does not lead to carelessness, but to a holy fear of sinning.

If our justification was apart from our merit, our sanctification will be.—The one was a gift, so must the other be; the hand of faith must receive each from Christ, and her voice must render thanks for each, as the unmerited gift of Divine Love. Where is boasting, then? It is shut out. We can claim nothing but emptiness and need. Handfuls of withered leaves! Jesus is our only hope, pleading for us in heaven, and living within our hearts. Only in Him are we complete.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 1.

"He doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and widow."—Deut. x. 18.

In the gate of the Eastern town, at early morn, the judge sits, and any suppliant has a right to appeal to him. The word Porte, or Gate, as applied to the Turkish Government, alludes to this. So to the thought of the inspired writers, behind the flimsy veil of sense, God sat within the shadow, "keeping watch upon his own," waiting to answer every plea, and to avenge the innocent and oppressed against high-handed wrong.

Individuals may Appeal to that Tribunal.—David, Jeremiah, and other sufferers lodged their complaints there. Their cry was not for revenge, but for avengement. There is a great difference between the two. The one is vindictive and retaliatory, the other is magisterial and passionless. Whenever an affront or wrong is inflicted on thee, avoid vindicating, or answering for, thyself.

Be still towards man, unless it be to induce thy brother to repent, and turn instantly to thy righteous Judge, asking Him to right the wrong and vindicate the right. He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday. When Christians go to law, and seek to maintain their cause against wrong-doing, they miss this. The weaker you are the more certainly will the Lord judge for you.

The Church may Appeal.—Our Lord depicted her as a widow pleading to be avenged of her adversary; her martyrs cry from under the altar, "How long, O Master, holy and true? Dost Thou not judge and avenge our blood?" To us the delay is long, but we know that He has no complicity with evil, and that He is faithful. Give us the white robe that we may wait.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 2.

"If ye shall diligently keep all this commandment to do it, then will the Lord drive out."—Deut. xi. 22-23.

We wonder why the Lord does not drive out and subdue our besetting sins. We do not possess them, but they us. The explanation is to be found in our lack of consecration. We do not keep all his commandments, or walk in all his ways.

God cannot deliver us from besetting sin unless we yield ourselves to Him entirely.—It is only when He is Judge, Lawgiver, and King that He can save us. The great surgeon will not undertake a case unless he have its entire management. The general cannot protect a town until it has passed over its Government entirely into his hands. If you would give yourself utterly and unreservedly to God, you would find how strong He is for those whose heart is perfect towards Him.

Unless we obey all his commandments; because they contain his precise direction as to what we should, or should not do. If you want your medical man to heal you, you must abstain from things he forbids, and do those he prescribes. You cannot expect God to save you unless you utterly and reverently obey all his commandments; that, for instance, of not having fellowship with the world and its ways.

Unless we cleave unto Him.—There must be the daily walk with God, the abiding in Him, the holy and unbroken communion. "He that abideth in Him sinneth not." The anointing of the Holy Spirit will teach us this sacred habit (1 John ii. 27).

FRIDAY, JANUARY 3.

"Thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God.—Deut. xii. 7, 12, 18.

The presence of God is an incentive to true joy. We rejoice before Him. There is some mistake in our religious life when it is not a joy to us to stand in the presence of God. He that feareth, and rejoiceth not, is not made perfect in love. Note the elements of true joy.

First. The putting away of all known evil.—"Ye shall surely destroy." The permission of evil habits, books, companionships, and unlawful methods of obtaining money, are destructive of peace and joy. The prodigal son went away for merriment, but he only found it when he had given up his evil ways and had returned to his father.

Second. The sense of acceptance with God through Jesus Christ.—"Unto the place which the Lord shall choose shall ye come." This refers, of course, to the brazen altar and the altar of incense. We have a better heritage in the finished work of Jesus, whose blood is more precious than that of bulls and goats and lambs, and in whom we are accepted and beloved.

Third. Feeding on Christ.—"Ye shall eat and rejoice." A part of the meal-offerings and other sacrifices was reserved for the worshippers. We have an altar of which we, too, eat. His flesh is meat indeed, his blood drink indeed.

Fourth. Entrance on the rest of our Inheritance.—We which believe do enter into rest; not the rest of heaven, but the heavenly places which those enjoy who have learnt to cast every load of anxious care on the great Burden-bearer.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4.

"The Lord your God proveth you."—Deut. xiii. 3.

How much happens to us for this reason. God proves us, not that He may learn aught of us which He did not know before, but that He may reveal us to ourselves. We need to know ourselves that we may be prompted to know and use his infinite resources, and that, in the great consciousness of our frailty and weakness, we may be led to avail ourselves of his grace.

God proves us by opportunities of Christian service.—We think we are fitted for some great sphere, and chafe because it is withheld, but the reason is not far to seek. We have been tested in some very little service, as a class in the Sunday-school, and have been found to be careless and unpunctual; is it likely that we shall be entrusted with the greater?

God proves us by the money with which He entrusts us.—Money resembles the counters with which children play. It greatly tests us. It is described as the unrighteous mammon, and as not being our true riches; but it is entrusted to us that we may be proved, before God entrusts us with the real treasures of His Kingdom. Be wary how you use money, on this may turn the responsibilities of the eternal world of which we now know nothing.

God proves us by our actions with regard to doubtful things.—Not in the things which are clearly right or wrong, but in those which lie in the debatable ground of the twilight, is our true character tested. What you are in matters which must be viewed in relation to others is all important, as the true gauge of character. By currents of opinion, winds of doctrine, the many voices that are speaking in the world, the Lord your God proveth you.

THE FORERUNNER OF CHRIST.—Luke i. 5-17.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 76.

LUKE, the author of this Gospel, was a physician, probably at Troas (Col. iv. 14), at which place he joined Paul, and became the companion of his missionary travels, journeying with him to Rome (Acts xxvii. 1), where he remained until the time of the apostle's death (2 Tim. iv. 11). It is probable that he obtained his information from the apostle. The brief preface with which his Gospel opens tells us that many attempts had been made to write the story of Christ's life (1), and that he had exercised special care as to the accuracy of his narrative (3). Godet calls the first and second chapters "The Gospel of the Infancy," because they relate particularly the facts concerning the birth of John and the birth of Jesus.

The announcement of the birth of the Forerunner, made by the angel Gabriel to Zacharias, broke the silence of four centuries. Since Malachi no prophet had appeared. In the interval the Jewish nation had declined in power and glory. In religion the form only remained. The traditions of men had made void the law of God. The hope of the Messiah, except in a few sincere souls, had degenerated into the expectation of a One who would deliver them from the power of Rome.

The lessons may gather around three things in this story:—

I. THE PARENTS OF JOHN (5-7).—Their very names are significant. Zacharias means "The Lord Remembers;" and Elizabeth means "God's Oath." The song of Zacharias seems to have recognised the connection between their names, and the fulfilment of God's promise. (See verses 72, 73.) Both belonged to the priestly family. The most honoured of the twelve tribes were those of Judah and Levi; the one was the Royal Tribe, the other was separated for tabernacle service. In Judah, the family of David was chosen for the throne; and in Levi the family of Aaron were set apart as priests of the Sanctuary. Yet John never claimed the dignity and honour to which he was born. Because he was the herald of Him who should be both King and Priest, who should be "a Priest upon his throne."

The character of both parents receives special notice (6). Their righteousness was not intended for the eye of men but for God. They were sincere, true, whole-hearted, and yielded complete obedience to the will of God so far as they knew it. To maintain such a character in the days of such abounding iniquity proves them to have been saints indeed. Their light shines the more brightly because of the very dark times in which they lived.

II. THE MIRACULOUS ANNOUNCEMENT (8-14).—David had divided the priests into twenty-four courses (1 Chron. xxiv.). Those at the head of each set were called "chief priests." Each of these courses ministered in the temple for one week. The different duties of the priest were decided by lot (9), and as there were about 20,000 priests in the time of Christ, no priest would be likely to offer incense more than once. This must have been to Zacharias the most important and solemn day of his life. Picture him as he passes from the court of the temple, where stood the brazen altar and the laver, and entered into the Holy Place. On one side stood the golden candlestick, and on the other the table of shewbread; while the golden altar of incense, at which Zacharias ministered, was in the centre, immediately in front of the veil that concealed the Holy of Holies. The incense was a preparation of fragrant spices (Ex. xxx. 34-38), and rose in smoke from the altar as "a chariot for the prayers" of the people (10). It symbolises, not our prayers, but the perfect intercession of Jesus.

Observe that this angelic appearance was granted to Zacharias while he was fulfilling his appointed service. No exalted favours are granted to rapturous indolence. The announcement was an answer to an oft-repeated prayer (13). Perhaps Zacharias had ceased to expect it; for its fulfilment had become humanly impossible. Learn that prayers, if forgotten on earth are remembered in heaven; that an answer delayed is not therefore denied; that God's time for answering may be much later than ours.

III. THE FORERUNNER (15-17).—Before his birth he is named (13), and his character and work are described. His greatness consists in his Nazarite self-control and separation to God (Numb. vi. 1-5), and in his being full of the Holy Ghost (15). In such greatness we may be imitators of him (Eph. v. 18). His work was that of a Forerunner. He prepared the way for the Messiah by his fearless denunciation of the sins of the people, and his urgent calls to repentance. In this he resembled Elijah (Comp. Mal. iv. 5, 6, with Matt. xi. 14; xvii. 10-13). We imitate him by every effort to make men know their need of the Saviour.

For the Young.

IN A TOP ROOM.

IN the top room of an overcrowded house in a long, dull street, situated in a busy and thronged part of London, a doctor was making an examination of a patient. "Any pain here?" he asked, touching a particular spot. "No, the pain has gone from there; it is higher up now," was the answer.

The speaker was a young girl, and the flush on her cheeks and the brightness of her eyes told plainly that she was consumptive. She seemed very happy, despite the pain, and appeared greatly to interest the doctor. "You are dull up here," he said. "Is there no one in the house who can sit with you abi t?"

"They are all very kind," said the young girl, "but they are so busy. Mrs. Lane comes up as often as she can." Then a sudden thought appeared to come to her. "I wonder if Mr. Hanson would allow his little girl to come up to me for half-an-hour? I have seen her only from the window, because they have but lately come." "I will ask him," said the doctor. "Only don't let her weary you."

Half-an-hour later a timid tap came to the door, and the sick girl hailed with smiles her little visitor, Dorothy Hanson. "How good of you to come!" she cried, "It is an angel's visit." "What is an angel?" asked the child; "I never knew one." "You will some day," was the reply. "Really, an angel is a messenger—a minister, as my father used to explain to me. You are my little minister, come to cheer me. And I love you, darling—I have seen you go out with your father.'

"I don't like the people in this house," said the child, "and my father was sorry to bring me here. But my mammie died, and my father was ill, and now he has no money, and he is often very sad, and I cry, because he won't pet and talk to me."

"I am very sorry," said the invalid tenderly, "and I wish I could help you. Perhaps the Good Shepherd who loves the little lambs will show me how I can do this for Him." "Who is He?" asked the child. "I like you very much!" she added, with a sudden change of a child's thoughts, "That is very sweet to hear!" said gentle Mary Bray. "And would you like to know about the Good Shepherd? He is the Saviour Jesus Christ, and He loves and wants for Himself all the boys and girls, that He may make them happy and useful all the day long. He wants you, darling. Do you know Him?" "No," said the child; "I should like to know Him. I have heard of Jesus Christ, because I've been to church, but I do not think my father knows Him. He works too hard to go to church."

Then the gentle invalid told, in brief words and simple language, the story of God's Son, Jesus Christ. Day by day little Dorothy would visit the sick room, and her questions and remarks showed Mary that the beautiful story was sinking into her young heart.

One day the child was full of tender little offices. "Oh! I wish I had some money! I would buy you some grapes! I heard you coughing in the night, my sweet Miss Bray!" Mary recognised the new spirit. She asked, "That is a new wish, is it not? Where did it come from?" "The Good Shepherd put it into my heart," said the child; "I do want to please Him and to be like Him."

"Yes, He will help you to do that," said Mary, feeling in her heart that the child talked like an adult, the result of living continually with her father, and having no child for companion. Every day the invalid saw some fresh growth of grace in her little "ministering angel," as she called her. "Miss Bray, my father told me to ask you if Jesus can cure a broken heart. I told him I thought He could do everything—He is so great, and so loving, and so good." "Tell your father, darling, that if he will search in the Bible he will find that Jesus can not only do that but greater things besides. I wish I could grow strong that I might go to your father and tell him. But I pray for him."

The child faithfully reported this to her father—a young man who, when he lost his wife, lost his energy, and had gradually lost his patrons (he was a portrait painter), and so had become poor to the verge of poverty.

Since she had found a sympathiser and friend in Mary Bray, the child had grown more childish, fonder of play, and more fun and laughter. Her father noticed this. "You seem happier than you used to be, Dorothy," he said. "I am, father. You see, I think it's because I'm usefuller. "I believe it is," said he; "you've grown a busy little woman." From disliking the people in the house, she had grown to be a little sunbeam among them, doing little acts of kindness, smiling at the weary ones, and telling children like herself that Miss Bray upstairs was so patient, and that Jesus helped her, and that He loved all the boys and girls.

All this, noticed by her father, impressed him. He got out his late wife's scarce-used Bible, and, as Mary had suggested, "searched" it. He read, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him," and when he sent to Mary to ask what it meant, she sent as a reply, "It means loving and helping others as He would love and help them." He acted on this, and found that it filled his heart with thanksgiving, and promoted growth. He soon was able to send Mary to Ventnor, where she grew rapidly better for a time, and experienced the happiness of those who in watering others are themselves watered.

One spring day, Mr. Hanson and Dorothy left their old lodgings, and went to live in a pretty little cottage in Surrey, where father and daughter soon made friends among their neighbours because of their helping, loving, Christlike ways. In time, John Hanson (that is the name I give him) found that he was getting a r ch man. He spoke to Dorothy. "It won't do," he said. "Our Lord was poor. We will live simply, and give the rest to Him and to his needy ones."

He first built a mission-room; then he was able to give the villagers a small library, but first of all, to make his gifts worth anything, he gave himself. Mary died a year after she went to Ventnor, through the bursting of a blood-vessel. Her last words were: "He has been with me every step of the way, and and now I go to Him—my Jesus!"

She had done her work. She was going to her reward. Dorothy and her father are sincere, useful Christians, finding every day that they know more of "the secret of the Lord," as they seek to do his will in loving service for others, and in dependence on Him for blessing. M. B. GERDS.

A NEW YEAR'S MESSAGE.

Matt. iv. 19.

HEARKEN, through the portal golden
Of another glad New Year,
Comes the Saviour's mandate olden,
Falling on the listening ear.

Do you hear Him with the pleading:
"Henceforth wilt thou follow Me?
In the prints, My pierced feet bleeding,
Mark the narrow way for thee."

Follow, yea with gladness choosing
Christ in weal, and Christ in woe,
Whether gaining, whether losing,
His thy service here below.

Follow, to the squalid alley,
Follow, to the felon's cell,
To the rugged steep or valley,
Where his poor and suffering dwell.

Follow, though the way be dreary,
'Twas the path by Jesus trod,
Though thy heart and frame be weary,
Yours this peace, the peace of God.

Follow, lifting many a burden,
In his Name, from hearts distressed,
Joyful toil, on earth your guerdon,
And in heaven eternal rest.

Follow, of his goodness telling,
Till the King unveiled you see,
For where'er the Master's dwelling,
There shall ye his servant be.

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

THE Y.M.C.A.

NEW YEAR'S ADDRESS.

The President, Sir George Williams, has issued his annual address, beginning, as he says, another chapter in Y.M.C.A. history. We make the following extracts :—

The wave of blessing which was vouchsafed during our year of Jubilee still continues to flow. The barometer is not falling. Our second half-century of service promises, not only to maintain but to transcend the sacred traditions of the half-century that is gone. The achievements of the past year demonstrate this, and should inspire us with fresh enthusiasm to press forward, and courageously to seek to plant our flag upon yet increasing heights.

Reports from various quarters and from different countries are most encouraging. With but few exceptions, they speak of activity and progress. New buildings of a handsome and costly character have been erected, and others commenced. Enlargement schemes have been launched. Efforts have been put forth by District Unions for the purpose of enlarging their circle of usefulness. New secretaries have been appointed for home and foreign service; a revival of interest has been awakened in connection with our universities and colleges that is full of promise—all of which must be regarded as indications of the Divine presence and blessing, and as affording further proof of the adaptability of the Y.M.C.A. to meet the ever-increasing needs of young men throughout the world. Nevertheless we have had to encounter difficulties, and are far from being satisfied with what has been accomplished. The greater part of the land has yet to be possessed. The need for extension grows with the world's growth. We would be alive to the pressing necessities of the hour. The battle still rages. The forces of evil confront us, and the call to action was never louder or more distinct. Let us therefore respond to the Divine voice, and, with unswerving loyalty and unfaltering devotion to Christ,

GIRD OURSELVES AFRESH FOR THE CONFLICT.

It is in this direction that I earnestly desire to cheer and encourage you, and to stimulate and strengthen within you all those essential and enduring qualities which characterise true Christian manhood.

The motto text selected by the National Council—

But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. xv., 57)— cannot fail to be of practical value to us, both in our personal life and Association work. In it we have the pledge and assurance of ultimate victory. This should be more than sufficient to nerve our energies, and to inspire and sustain us under all our difficulties and discouragements.

Standing as we do upon the threshold of another year, as Associations and as individuals, whether we review the past or experience the present, or anticipate the future,

"Our greatest need in God's greatest gift—the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Without His vitalising and energising power we are powerless. Thus equipped we may be invincible. This priceless gift God pledges Himself to bestow upon those who seek it. Shall we not, therefore, humbly, reverently, and trustfully do this—that to to us may be given the gifts and power of the apostolic age, that we may be witnesses for Christ in the sphere of our daily calling, and be enabled, faithfully and usefully, to serve our generation by the will of God?

There can be no higher ministry than the consecration of our talents in seeking to reveal Christ to our fellow young men. There can be no higher aspiration possible to any young man than that of leading a companion or associate to Jesus Christ. In this glorious work we would and with courageous and sympathetic co-operation continue with deepening faith and growing hope to unfurl the banner of our honoured and beloved Y.M.C.A., and to promote that "righteousness which exalteth a nation."

HOMES OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

The monthly workers' meeting was held on Wednesday last week, at the Home of Industry, Bethnal Green-road. Miss Macpherson, in the early part of the evening, introduced the children now in the Training Home, and gave touching details of the misery and danger from which these had been rescued. This led to a few words on prospects in Canada, followed by some indication on the varied operations going on in the East-end among the suffering and sinful; on behalf of aged widows and poor rough factory girls, and neglected and homeless children. Quite a series of special gatherings are being arranged for Christmas and New Year, reaching all classes and affording opportunities of bringing the Gospel before the careless and indifferent.

After a season of praise and prayer, Mr. Huntington Stone read and expounded the parable of the Talents, as given in Luke xix., applying its lessons with force and fervour to daily life and service.

Mrs. W. Wilson, who has laboured in China for thirteen years, dwelt on the density of the darkness in that land, remarking that the experience of many missionaries is that, although before leaving home they had thought little of the coming of the King, yet, after discovering what heathenism really means, it became the joy of their heart to know that He is coming to scatter darkness, break down opposition, and win the heathen to Himself. A brief account followed of service among the women of China, and especially at Han-chung (Shen-si), where she and her husband had been labouring.

Dr. Wilson spoke of the peculiar position and importance of China, and touched on some of the internal consequences of the recent war in that vast and unwieldy empire.

During the evening Miss Ferguson, about to start for Darjeeling, there to join Miss Annie Taylor, spoke with considerable point and feeling on the call she felt she had received, and on the work of the future.

MR. MERTON SMITH IN MICHIGAN.

Union meetings at West Branch, Mich., were lately held, with the most complete victory for the kingdom of God ever known in that place. When Mr. Merton Smith began the meetings, the most confident did not expect much in the face of the opposition, both in the church and out of it. The results are not questioned by the most sceptical. Some of the most bitter opponents were caught in the toils and saved by the power of God. Lawyers, editors, bankers, grocers, sceptics, and all classes of men, were brought to the feet of Jesus. Fathers, mothers, children, and whole families came, which must have made glad the city of God.

Business men who were deeply merged in their business, and ready to cater to the world for a little gain, closed up shop and came to four meetings a day. The opera house, which has been used for the theatre and dance, is to be turned into a store room. Secret societies, which are numerous, are becoming unpopular. Women who had been bitter enemies for years, met in the presence of the congregation and kissed each other. Some 200 have made a profession during the meetings.

The closing meeting was a wonderful one, and made the hearts of those who had the responsibility on their shoulders rejoice to see the unsaved all over the house rising as an indication of accepting Christ as their Saviour. The Bible readings in the afternoon were full of the rich truths of God's Word, and many expressed their gratitude to Mr. Smith for the strength, light, and comfort these readings brought them.—Record of Christian Work.

TEMPERANCE IN AUSTRALIA.—Mr. M. L. Hutchinson, who a few months ago gave an account in our pages of the operations of the Victorian Alliance for the Suppression of the Liquor Traffic, writes urging the need of help from this side, seeing that the battle is sore, the evils of intemperance deplorably disastrous, and funds (owing to the recent crisis) very short. Mr. Hutchinson may be addressed 305, Little Collins-street, Melbourne.

A SOUL'S QUEST FOR PEACE.

Oh, lovely peace, where dwellest thou? I sought thee long in devious paths. In deep longing my soul followed hard after thee. First I sought thee in the whirl of city life; there, amid the haunts of vanity, I thought that I might drown my restlessness, and find, instead of it, abiding peace. But soon in bitterness of spirit I withdrew; the laughter grated on my ears, the smiles were false. For a moment the joys they offered me glittered iridescent, like bubbles, then burst.

Thenceforth I sought the kindlier friendship of the birds and flowers. Surely in Nature I should find a balm! The sun shone brightly on a peaceful world; the birds trilled to their mates in hedge and tree; the primroses reposed upon their mossy banks; the harebells waved in the breeze—yet this outward calm did not pacify my heart. The very beauty jarred on my soul, mocking my misery. Because my heart was not attune to Nature, its perfect harmony was discord to me.

I left the fields and lanes to seek some wilder scene. In the restless music of the ocean I found a note of sympathy, but not peace. The tossing seething waves found echo in my soul; their low, retreating moans drew forth my tears; they seemed to be akin to me, yet for that very reason they could not give me ease.

Reluctantly I left the ocean which I loved so well, and turned to books, that in the thoughts of other men I might find rest. In much study I found weariness. I could not in this outward source, find thee, sweet peace!

Then I bethought me of the great and good who forgot themselves in doing noble deeds. I sought to lose myself in caring for the dying and the poor. Still, when thoughts did turn back upon myself, my heart ached sore. As the ray from a search light deepens the shadows, so momentary ease accentuated my wretchedness. I knew I had not found thee, priceless gem.

One evening, when all was still, I threw my casement open and looked out: dark storm clouds were hurrying across the sky. Restless and tired of my fruitless quest I cried, in anguish, "O God, great Ruler of the universe, lay Thou thy hand upon my heated brow, and still these whirling thoughts; let now thy healing touch bring me the peace I long have sought in vain." As I prayed the clouds were riven, their ragged edges were of burnished gold. The beauty of the scene brought many holy thoughts. My mind travelled back across the centuries until it reached that greatest era in the history of the world. I stood in fancy beneath the shadow of the Cross, and gazed with a new interest upon the face of Him who hung thereon. I thought He smiled upon me as I stood, a smile fraught with the tenderest sympathy and love; a new light flashed in upon my soul and awoke me from the stupor of despair. I saw how vain had been my search for peace apart from God. It was in the face of Jesus Christ his Son that I read the secret of perfect peace.

As the morning sun kisses the dewdrops from the weeping flowers, and causes them to lift their drooping heads once more, even so the Sun of Righteousness arose with healing in his wings. Beneath the brightness of that light my fading hopes revived, my heart was thrilled with joy, my strife was at an end.

LANSDOWNE-PLACE RAGGED SCHOOL MISSION carried on in a poor corner in the Borough, reports large and increasing Sunday-schools, with evidences result. The Christian Bands show marked growth; the Bible-classes, mothers' meetings, Gospel temperance, and other meetings are full of interest. Dr. W. Henry Green,

PROFESSOR IN PRINCETON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

THE subject of our present sketch is a scholar of eminence and a doughty defender of the faith. Highly esteemed in the world of letters, and widely known as a Christian controversialist, he has had a career of which many of our readers will wish to have an outline.

WILLIAM HENRY GREEN has for forty-four years been a professor in Princeton Theological Seminary. In his youth he came under the influence of sturdy men, and in his maturity he has done much to equip others to be strong and of a good courage in the conflict against ignorance and error. Born in 1825 at Groveville, New Jersey, he is over seventy years of age. As a lad he showed remarkable mental powers and praiseworthy devotion in his school studies. Like others who could be named, he combined instinctive facility in the acquisition of Oriental tongues with an unusual taste for mathematics. Hence, while yet under twenty, he was engaged for a time as professor of mathematics at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa.; but, determining upon a theological course, he entered Princeton, and had among his classmates A. A. Hodge, T. L. Cuyler, and H. J. van Dyke.

After graduation, at the age of twenty-one, he was appointed assistant teacher of Hebrew in the Seminary; the duties of that office he discharged for three years, while occupying the pulpits of the Presbyterian churches of the town of Princeton. In 1849 he undertook the pastorate of the Central Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, but after two years he was recalled to Princeton to succeed Joseph Addison Alexander as Professor of Biblical and Oriental Literature. In 1859, consequent upon changes in the allocation of work, he was relieved of New Testament instruction, and installed as Professor of Oriental and Old Testament Literature, a post which he has filled to the present time. Side by side with famous men, men of unquestioned scholarship and doctrinal soundness, the Professor has laboured "these forty years" and more, and in the conflict with the Higher Criticism has wielded an influence which has convinced all but the most blind among modern theorists and innovators that there is something to be said for "the old paths."

While doing a tremendous amount of work as an instructor, Dr. Green has entered freely into the controversies of the past generation and the present. He has not only a knowledge of Hebrew and its cognates so thorough as to gain him the respectful attention of all, but he has abundant common sense and practical skill, so that he can present difficult problems in such a manner that the ordinary intellect can easily grasp them. In regard to critical questions affecting the Old Testament, he has a great advantage over younger men, who so generally favour 'advanced' opinions. As new ideas are presented, they come to him in succession to scores of others which have already become discredited and been consigned to the limbo of exploded notions. Having a marvellous acquaintance with Scripture in its minutest details, he yet stands firm by the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch and the unity of Isaiah, and in a general way gives battle to those who, with no such claims to erudition, not only follow the newer fashions, but confidently put their views forward as ascertained truth which all must eventually receive. Dr. Green's attitude should encourage others who maintain the same position, although not able to give their reasons so fully and so well.

For nearly half a century Dr. Green has been watching the turns of the critical kaleidoscope; and knowing at once the construction of the instrument and the materialistic influences under which the turns have too often taken place, he is as firm in his defence of Scripture to-day as he was when he wrote his first critical article in 1850. Not to specify his linguistic researches, and his works on Hebrew grammar in particular, we may mention that he has from time to time entered the lists against Colenso, Robertson Smith, and Kuenen. One of his works, "The Hebrew Feasts in their Relation to Recent Critical Hypotheses Concerning the Pentateuch" (1885), has enjoyed the distinction of being translated into German, and is highly valued by the many scholars of Germany who remain loyal to Scripture and maintain its integrity and authority. From 1888 to 1892, in the American quarterly Hebraica, he took part in an exhaustive discussion of the Pentateuchal question, the "critical" side being ably stated by Professor Harper. Those who possess these volumes have in Dr. Green's articles more than a reply to all that has been said on the other side. That Dr. Green's word and judgment have popular weight is evident from a story which was current a few years since. A lecture on "Moses and the Pentateuch" was announced in a New England city, whereupon Dr. Green consented to reply the following week. This fact being announced, the first lecture was not delivered; but Dr. Green did not let the occasion slip to show the unreliable character of the "facts" and the speciousness of the arguments in which the analysts so frequently deal.

As chairman of the American Committee of Old Testament Revision, Dr. Green did excellent work. In addition to holding degrees from universities in the United States and Canada, he has been honoured with D.D. from Edinburgh. His zeal for Scripture truth as against dangerous speculation has led him to attend occasional conferences for the defence and exposition of the Bible. Dr. Munhall's "Anti-Higher Criticism" (1½ dol. Hunt & Eaton, New York) contains addresses by him on the Unity and Mosaic Origin of the Pentateuch. To Dr. Talbot Chambers' "Moses and his Recent Critics" (6s. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street) he contributed an article on "Pentateuchal Analysis." A few months ago he published "The Higher Criticism of the Pentateuch" (1½ dol. Scribner's Sons, New York), a comprehensive book on its subject.

The biographical facts in this notice are mainly from an article contributed to the American Old and New Testament Student, in 1889, by Professor J. F. McCurdy, of Toronto, one of Dr. Green's old pupils; and the portrait is engraved from one given in the Student. Dr. McCurdy concludes his sketch: "Dr. Green's force of character, the product of simplicity of nature, singleness of purpose, fervour of spirit, and intense energy, along with his manifold intellectual gifts, has made him a tower of strength to the institution which has been the scene and centre of his labours for nearly half-a-century; and while other names before his had been written large upon its walls, the men of this time have learned through him also to think deferentially and reverently of Princeton."

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

IN an Occasional Paper just issued, the medical superintendent of this mission gives a number of touching cases showing the value of the work. Amongst these is that of a discharged soldier, who says he found the Lord as his Saviour one evening last summer when Mr. Crombie (the secretary) spoke of people carrying about dead souls in them, and the awful doom of the impenitent; he and his wife are now rejoicing, and seem to enjoy the Gospel Services. He says that for twelve years before his conversion he never entered a church. Another is a poor widow left with four children, living over a cats'-meat shop. Her children down with measles and bronchitis, mother was unable to go to work, and were it not for the Mission supplying food and fire they must have perished.

"We meet many cases of consumption, and patients suffering from chronic affections, which are unsuitable for the hospitals, some of which remain under treatment for long periods. How many of these have been, and will be, translated into the Kingdom of God's dear Son eternity alone will reveal. By the twofold ministry of this special kind of work, a hearing is obtained for the Gospel, and thus the poor and needy are taught to taste and see that the Lord is good."

Mention is also made of the Convalescent Home, the Holiday Home, the Relief Fund; and an earnest appeal is made for clothing. The superintendent is Dr. Latchford, 33 and 34, Short's Gardens, Endell-street, W.C.

THE BRISTOL BELIEVERS' MEETINGS are to be held in the Gospel Hall, St. Nicholas-road, on January 14 and 15. The letter of invitation says:—"'The coming of the Lord draweth nigh.' There is therefore a special call to increased prayerfulness and watchfulness, and to meditation upon Him—his finished work, the power of his risen life, and the glory of his coming again. Prayer is earnestly asked for Divine guidance in all the arrangements, direction for each speaker, and preparation of heart to those who gather." Friends requiring accommodation are requested to make known the same as early as possible to W. F. Higgins, 107, Stokes'-croft, Bristol.

THE TRUTH—IN LOVE.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

"Could you preach that text tenderly?" enquired McCheyne of a ministerial brother who had been preaching on that terrific passage, "The wicked shall be turned into hell." It was not a truth to be kept back, but the effect of its bold presentation would depend on its flowing through tears of solicitude for those who were throwing themselves into the pit of perdition. It was to be spoken, not in threatening taunt, but in bursting tenderness, even as the compassionate Jesus wept over the guilty city that was thirsting for his blood. He is the model preacher who can proclaim God's truth the most fearlessly and yet the most lovingly.

The great Apostle in his letter to his Ephesian brethren struck deeper yet than any utterance of the lips. The original Greek words which he employs are, alētheuontes en agapē, and that signifies "truthing it in love." It refers to conduct as well as to speech, and in the Revised Version it is put in the margin, "dealing truly." This demands that we shall not only speak out the truth, but live it out; and yet in the spirit of sympathetic Christian love. It involves the unflinching fidelity of a clean conscience speaking and acting from the inspirations of a loving heart. All Christian parents do not practise on this principle of truthing it in love. Some utter the word "No!" to a child's request in a tone of thunder. Deserved reproofs are so spoken as to have the sound of a rawhide. I have known an impatient father attempt to correct a sulky, sullen son by rudely jerking him into obedience. I have heard a mother rebuke a daughter's petulance, but in a manner so petulant that she confirmed the fault instead of correcting it. Probably there are hardened transgressors to-day scowling through prison bars who might have been saved in their boyhood by a firm, yet a loving discipline. There are broken-hearted daughters wearing through their lives in domestic woefulness who might have had a happier lot if in their early home there had been more fidelity sweetened with tenderness. Parental harshness breeds many sad marriages.

When we construct a perfect sphere, we join together the two halves that complete the rounded circumference. So in the formation of a symmetric Christian character, there are two traits required, which are too often separated. A good man may possess the one trait and lack the other; the want of it impairs his usefulness. His character wants completeness, and his efforts often lack the best efficiency.

One of these traits is that unshrinking, uncompromising devotion to the right—that loyalty to conscience which is the basis of all heroism. The truth—and the truth at all hazards—is the motto of this class of stiffly vertebrated characters. Out of this stuff are made the Luthers, the John Knoxes, the Oliver Cromwells—the spiritual descendants of the prophet Ezekiel. To this class we might attach the revered name of President Edwards were it not that that illustrious man so often tempered his drastic theology with the sweet tones of God's mercy in redemption. Whatever may be allowed to men of a cast-iron make, it is undeniable that truth-holding, truth-speaking, and truth-living reach their highest efficiency when they are saturated with love. This is the beautiful queen of the sisterhood of graces on whom Paul fixed his eye when he said, "Now abideth these three—Faith, Hope, and Love, but the greatest of these is Love." In that same sisterhood are gentleness, patience, humility, pity, and long-suffering. The Holy Spirit, in the production of the most winsome style of Christian character, blends these graces. They are embodied in the Apostle John, in Mary with the ready foot, and Dorcas with the ready finger, in gentle Melanchthons and high-minded Fénélons, in social reformers like Wilberforce, and in ministers of Christ like Rutherford, to whom no commandment was dearer than the new commandment that we love one another.

All this type of character is as conspicuous for certain spiritual traits as is the stout John Knox type for another style of traits and another method of serving God. These different traits are not antagonistic. The Bible does not divorce them. It never sets gentleness and humility above courage, or justice above mercy, or sterling honesty above benevolence. On the contrary, it bids us to "truth it in love"—to blend the traits which make the perfect man in Christ Jesus.

Was not the Son of God the divine embodiment of matchless holiness and ineffable tenderness? He blasts with the lightnings of his righteous indignation the hollow-hearted Pharisees, and welcomes the penitent woman who pours the tears of her contrition on his feet. He denounces Jerusalem's sins and weeps over her doom. He loathes sin, and yet sheds his blood for sinners. As Horace Bushnell beautifully says, "When He hangs, a bruised flower, drooping on his cross, and the sun is dark in the skies, and earth beneath shudders with pain, what have we in this funeral grief of the world but a fit tribute to the majesty of Divine love dying for a race of malefactors?"

In Jesus Christ we see the true balance of qualities that never lost their equipoise. Let us strive toward that ensample set before us. Let us strive to be sternly right without being intolerant, temperate without being ascetic, liberal without being lax, fervent yet not fanatical, and without any malignity in our philanthropies. Especially let us aim to speak the truth and to live out God's truth in love. Then shall we win most converts to the truth as it is in Jesus. Honey catches more flies than vinegar. The Gospel of justice and of the terrible retribution of sin is to be preached and preached faithfully, and yet "with tenderness." In the Gospel, law is love and love is law. There is a way of rebuking sin that wins the sinner; there is a way of defending the truth that turns its enemies into its friends. There is a way even of using the rod of correction—as God does—that melts the heart of the wrong-doer into contrition. And there is a life so copied after our blessed Saviour's that God is served with all the mind and might and strength, and yet its sympathies are as gentle as the dew. The motto of such a life is "alēthuō en agapē"—I live (God's) truth in love.

OPEN-AIR WORK IN JAPAN.—Mr. Omura, of Japan, well known to many in this country, desires to inform our readers that the open-air work conducted in Japan for some time past by Mr. S. L. Nagasaki, has been taken over by the corps of the Salvation Army now at work in that country. As a consequence, Mr. Omura's connection with the work as hon. treasurer ceases.

MOON'S EMBOSSED BIBLE FOR THE BLIND.—It would be the greatest delight to many blind this New Year, if Christian friends would give them portions of the Holy Scriptures in the type invented by my father, the late Dr. Moon. There are many thousands of readers of this type, and a large proportion are adults who spend their time very much alone, to whom a portion of the Bible as a gift would be of the greatest comfort.

MR. C. INGLIS AT LEITH.

Mr. Chas. Inglis has paid his long-promised visit to Leith, which has been singularly owned and blessed of God. He was working under the auspices of the Christian Fellowship Union, which has nearly 700 members, belonging to the various churches in the city. The Sunday meetings were held in the Established and United Presbyterian churches, and the weekday meetings in the Central Hall.

From the very first service the Spirit of God began to work, and it was cheering to see the people who had been found out by the searching Word preached, leaving their pews for the inquiry room, to be spoken with by the workers. While some who have professed conversion have sat under a faithful ministry, not a few who have passed from death unto life have been gathered in from the world.

Large numbers have attended the afternoon Bible readings, and so great has been the interest in them that Mr. Inglis had to re-deliver his lecture on Psalm xxiii. Many in years to come will remember these days of refreshing, while to others the Bible has become a living Word. C.

THE STEPNEY CRECHE.

Recently a procession, accompanied by bands, banners, etc., was got up exclusively by working people in the locality of Mrs. Hilton's institutions in Stepney Causeway, Ratcliff, for the purpose of making a local street collection in aid of the funds. About £17 were collected in pence, halfpence, and farthings.

On her partial recovery from an illness of some weeks, Mrs. Hilton has sent a letter to the chief workers, warmly thanking them for their generous efforts. She assures them it has greatly touched and cheered her that in the twenty-fifth year of the institutions founded by her for the benefit of the poor, a spontaneous effort by the poor of the immediate vicinity themselves should be made to help in sustaining them by funds, and that all was done while she was on a bed of sickness, quite incapable of witnessing what was going on, or expressing her appreciation of it.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BIBLE AND PRAYER UNION.

Young people were never in greater danger of having the Bible pushed out of their daily life by the pressure of school and commercial life than they are to-day. Parents, Sunday and day school teachers, leaders of junior Bible-classes, and all workers among children, will find in this Union one of the greatest and most blessed helps in their service for God. The number now on the books of the Union is over 40,000; our little magazine, Lighted Footsteps, is eagerly read by a multitude of young people, and is earnestly commended by ministers and Sunday-school workers in all churches.

The card of Scripture portions for 1896 is now ready, and can easily be placed in the Bible for daily use.

I should like to call attention to the "Prayer and Work Union," the senior branch of the Young People's Bible and Prayer Union. Members are asked either in private prayer, or at the family altar, to unite daily with their fellow-members in prayer for personal consecration to God and to his service, and for spiritual growth, also for the work of the Union in all its branches. Each member is also asked to engage definitely in some branch of Christian service.

The card containing Scriptural portions for the year, and the rules, can be had for one penny.

The Prayer and Work Union has been used of God to bring new life into declining churches, and to lead many young Christians into earnest work for the salvation of their fellows.

THEATRICAL TEA-MEETING.—Lord Radstock and Mr. W. Forbes, at a recent social meeting of theatre employees, gave addresses, the Religious Tract Society sent Christmas cards, and the Bible Flower Mission gave scented sachets with texts attached.

EAST LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.—The new report of this work, under Rev. Peter Thompson's superintendence, is issued, and forms a remarkable record of salvation and relief service for the masses. The "facts and incidents" related are full of the best kind of romance. Copies may be had of Mr. Thompson, 242, Cable-street, E.

THE Y.M.C.A.

THE Auckland (N.Z.) Association organ shows vigorous work and encouraging results.

The South London Y.M.C.A. Magazine is to come out with the new year in a new series, under the title The Young Londoner.

The Leeds Y.M.C.A. Mission Band (for helping weak missions) has done admirable work during the last few months.

A very successful fortnight's evangelistic meetings in connection with the Cambuslang United Associations was lately carried on by Mr. C. G. Roger, of the Evangelisation Society.

The recent visit to the Camden-road Rooms by Dr. Carless, and his straight talk, will not soon be forgotten. Out of a congregation of about 120 some ten or a dozen young men who were convicted of sin remained behind, desirous of knowing more perfectly the Saviour and the way of salvation.

A meeting of the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. of Scotland was held in Dundee on Friday week. Mr. David Dreghorn presided, and there was a good attendance of members, representatives being present from Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, Dunfermline, Saltcoats, Montrose, Arbroath, and Carnoustie. The chief business was the resignation of Mr. R. Henderson Smith, who for the last thirteen years had acted as travelling secretary for Scotland, and who has now been appointed secretary of the Monthly Visitor Tract Society of Edinburgh.

For some years members of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. have been endeavouring to raise a fund to put up a Christian Institute for Grantown-on-Spey (on a site already secured). Their aim is to provide a comfortable building for meetings of a religious and elevating character, together with a library and reading-room, a recreation-room, and at least one room devoted to young women, all of which would be open daily to young men and women in lodgings or otherwise, who wish to meet for social Christian intercourse. The need for such premises in Grantown is very great. Its popularity as a health resort has, to a large extent, created employment for young men and women, numbers of whom are drafted in from country districts. The amount already collected or promised stands well over £600. In addition to this it is estimated that a further sum of £900 will be required to carry out the scheme and render the premises self-supporting.

THE Y.W.C.A.

A THREE days' sale of work, in aid of the Wood Green Branch, has been attended with satisfactory results.

Miss Ferguson, of the Dundee Institute, hopes to sail in January, to join Miss Taylor in the Tibetan Pioneer Mission.

The annual meeting of the Lewes Institute was held on the 11th inst., presided over by the Mayoress, Mrs. Wightman. Miss Hill, of Eastbourne, gave an address dealing with the aims and objects of the institution.

The fourteenth annual report of the Brixton Institute states that during the "week of prayer" Revs. W. R. Mowll and C. Brown gave addresses, and much blessing resulted. Missionary meetings have also been held. Miss Tranter has left for missionary work in China. The Bible Flower Mission is carrying on an excellent work. A penny bank has been started and is well supported. 168 of the members are now total abstainers.

The annual meeting of the Cambridge branch was held at the rooms of the Association. Rev. H. C. G. Moule, Principal of Ridley Hall, presided, and there was a good attendance. Mrs. C. J. Procter read the annual report, which stated that there were 227 members. The Bible-classes were better attended. Mrs. C. W. Moule, District Referee for Cambridgeshire, said they wanted more branches in the different towns. There were branches at Fulbourn and Wisbech, and one had just been started at Melbourn. The chairman spoke in warm commendation of the Association, and said that the work was according to their Master's mind; and one great and deep cause of thankfulness to his own heart was that during all these twenty-one years the society had put one thing steadily first—their Lord and Master as the influence and secret power that alone could give life-blood to the system. Mr. S. M. Holmden pleaded for more financial support, and Rev. C. J. Procter said he thought it would be a reproach both to the town and University if girls, coming to live in Cambridge, were deprived of a society like the Y.W.C.A.

CHICAGO BIBLE INSTITUTE.—We are glad to know that the outlook for the winter's work of this school was never more encouraging than at the present time. There are a very large number of students.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

IT is suggested that Senior C.E. Societies should be formed of older members who drop out of the ordinary Endeavour societies.

The Epworth League is flourishing in the Methodist churches of the United States and Canada. The latest calculation shows a membership of a million, about one-fourth of the total number of communicants.

There are now 42,800 Endeavour societies, with a membership of 2,568,000; 34,392 societies are in the United States, 3,185 in the Dominion of Canada; 3,000 in the United Kingdom; 1,600 in Australia; and the remainder in foreign lands.

There are now nearly ten thousand Junior societies enrolled, and more are being added every week, thirty-five having been reported last week. Their marvellous and magnificent development is largely solving the problem of how to reach the boys and girls and train them for the older society, and thus "for Christ and the church."

PERSONALIA.

Mr. Richard Weaver is, we regret to hear, very unwell with bronchitis. Prayer is asked that, if it be the Lord's will, he may yet be spared to witness for Christ.

Mr. W. B. Harington writes from Bombay that he hopes to visit fifty or sixty soldiers' prayer-rooms during the next four months, in order to stir the Christians and win the unsaved to Christ.

Mr. James Bateman, of Worthing, whose name for upwards of half a century has been intimately associated with the Protestant cause, both through the Press and on the platform, is lying seriously ill at his residence in Sussex. His advanced age (eighty-five) renders recovery doubtful.

Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, is lying seriously ill at the new German Hospital, Jerusalem, where he is receiving the best possible attention from the doctor and deaconesses. He would be grateful if friends would pray for him. Mr. F. Newth, who acts as his correspondent at home, has now removed to 47, Chapel-road, Worthing.

Mrs. J. D. Allcroft, whose personalty has been sworn at £13,208 7s. 8d., desiring to carry out what she believed to be the wish of her late husband, has bequeathed out of money which had devolved upon her £1000 to the British and Foreign Bible Society, £1000 to the Royal Hospital for Incurables at Putney, and £1000 to the Church Missionary Society.

Rev. Charles Joseph, of Portsmouth, was recently the defendant in an action for slander, because of allegations made against a licensed house in the town, and was cast in damages and costs amounting to about £700. A subscription was started, and £976 was subscribed by his friends. At a great meeting, held last week at the Portsmouth Town Hall under the presidency of the Bishop-designate of Newcastle, Canon Jacob, an illuminated address was presented to Mr. Joseph, expressing high appreciation of the invaluable services he had rendered to the cause of social reform. The balance of the money collected is to be divided among various philanthropic organisations.

NEWPORT, MON.—John Adams, pilot, is carrying on a Gospel mission in one of the poorest corners of this town. Beginning in a humble way in 1890, the work has grown greatly. As his own business calls him from home he wants to engage a missionary, but for this he needs help. His address is Waterloo-road, Newport (Mon,).

A WORKER WANTED.—The foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society states that there is an opening in Hankow for the services of a fully qualified lady medical missionary to take charge of the work in the Margaret Hospital. Mrs. Gillison has been reluctantly compelled to resign responsible charge of it in consequence of continued ill-health. The success which has attended her work leads the Hankow Committee to appeal with great urgency to the directors to appoint someone in her stead. Mrs. Gillison went out as a self-supporting missionary, and the present position of the society entirely precludes the possibility of any appointment which would involve an additional charge upon the society's funds. Is there not someone who has the means of self-support as well as the necessary professional training, and who, for Christ's sake, would be willing to undertake this service on behalf of the multitudes of heathen women in Central China; or, failing this, is there no friend of missions, unable herself to go to the field, but able to support a substitute, who would undertake to maintain a lady medical missionary as her representative at Hankow?

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. B. Fay Mills will conduct meetings in New Haven, Conn., beginning January 6th.

Rev. J. W. Chapman held meetings in Fort Wayne, Indiana, in November, preaching in the rink to over four thousand people.

Mr. C. W. Merrill lately closed two weeks' meetings at Franklin, Neb. The churches all united in the work and there was good interest from the beginning. A very large number of men, women, and young people expressed a firm purpose to accept Christ and live a Christian life.

North Wingfield.—In this small mining village a mission has been held in the two Primitive Methodist chapels, which, owing to the interest awakened, was continued for six weeks. Large numbers profess conversion, and several of the converts are wondrous trophies of grace. R. D.

Barrow-in-Furness.—A fortnight's evangelistic mission has been held at Harlington Street Chapel by Mr. Thomas Payne. The evidences have not been few that God was in the mission, and whilst many have entered on the Christian life, many more are not far from the kingdom. JOS. PEARCE.

Mr. D. L. Moody has closed his month's Gospel campaign at Atlanta, Ga. He is estimated to have addressed 200,000 people during his visit. The crowds at the tabernacle have been vast and continuous, and it is believed that the permanent fruits of the month's work will be very large. Mr. Moody is now at Northfield.

Illinois, U.S.A.—Mr. F. T. Pierson has lately held a special mission in Lockport, Ill., with good results. At the close, two great mass meetings, one for men and one for women, were held in the Congregational and Methodist Episcopal churches. Such large numbers were never seen before at Gospel services in Lockport. The revival which began in the Congregational church spread to the other churches, and before long became a union movement, the influence of which was felt throughout the whole town.

Dr. L. W. Munhall.—On Wednesday evening, December 4, Dr. L. W. Munhall concluded a three weeks' evangelistic campaign in the city of Binghampton, N.Y., with most gratifying results. A moderate estimate is that not less than fifteen hundred persons indicated a desire to be Christians; but only the names of those who publicly confessed Christ, after the plan of salvation had been clearly stated, were taken, and of these there were nearly six hundred. Multitudes of church members were greatly revived. Besides these immediate results, it is expected that the churches of the city and surrounding country will be reaping harvests from this sowing for months to come.

Edinburgh.—Gipsy Smith has recently concluded a six weeks' mission in the Scottish capital, giving a week to each of the following churches:—Fountainbridge, Viewforth, West Port, North Leith, Pilrig, and Stockbridge. The interest and impression have been great. From the first there have been tokens of spiritual power and gracious working, and in every congregation there has been a manifest quickening of the Christians. Great crowds have gathered to hear him preach and sing. It is not his first visit to our city, but it is his first opportunity of giving indication of his power of sustained and successful effort in the same community; and all who have been associated with him in this work bear testimony to his success. On New Year's Day Mr. Smith is to sail for New York, and many will follow him with sympathy and prayer during a lengthened evangelistic tour in America.—British Weekly.

NEW FOREST GIPSY MISSION.—The annual meeting of this Mission was held on Wednesday, December 11, at the Y.W.C.A. Rooms, Southampton; presided over by the Hon. Granville Waldegrave. Mr. and Mrs. Bullen gave interesting accounts of their work. Mrs. Bullen spoke of the help afforded by friends who kindly sent gifts of clothing, etc. Mr. Griffith, hon. treasurer, spoke of the value of such an effort on behalf of these van and tent dwellers in and around the New Forest. Parcels of clothing may be addressed to W. Bullen, Bartley Mount, Totton, Hants; or to Lyndhurst-road Station.

EAST LONDON SEWING CLASS.—This class is held at Sidney-street, Mile-end, for very poor women. Every £1 given helps one member to earn 1s. weekly during the winter. The work is carried on with earnest attention to the spiritual and physical needs of the women employed, as in the past. Many of them are now very old, and without this small weekly addition some would have to go into the workhouse, sorely against their wishes. Many of the old subscribers are dead. The room, firing, and gas are paid for by a friend, so if some fresh subscriptions could be obtained the classes would be enlarged at once, which is much to be desired during the cold weather. Address, Lady A. Hobart, 63, St. George's Road, S.W.

OBITUARY.

REV. DR. VAN DYCK, BEYROUT.

The death is announced of Rev. Dr. Cornelius V.A. Van Dyck, of Beyrout, the well known translator of the Scriptures into Arabic. Dr. Van Dyck was the senior member of the Syrian Mission, where he began work in 1840. He was a doctor of medicine as well as a doctor of divinity. He was the associate of Dr. Edward Robinson in his travels in the East. As a professor in the Syrian Protestant College he did excellent work; he preached in Arabic as well as English; and visited the mission hospital twice a week. On January 25, 1894, we published a biographical sketch of Dr. Van Dyck, from the pen of Rev. Dr. Wright, of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

MR. JAMES JOHN CROWTHER, BROCKLEY.

The young of the present generation have lost a firm friend by the death of Mr. James John Crowther, which took place a few days ago at Brockley, S.E. Mr. Crowther was widely known as a popular lecturer; he was the author of several works, including "Across the Channel," "Autobiography of an Acorn," "The Horses of the Sun," and "The Microscope and its Lessons." For many years he was connected with Camden Sunday School, Camberwell, of which he was superintendent, and on leaving that neighbourhood and settling in Brockley, he actively engaged in Christian work. His most prominent effort of late years, however, has been the children's service on Sunday afternoons at St. Peter's, Brockley.

HOME FOR CONSUMPTIVES, WORTHING.

This Home at Richmond House, Worthing, was founded in 1891 by Mrs. St. A. Horton, its primary object being to receive consumptives, even in the last stage of the disease. Since that date 900 patients have passed through it, 600 of whom were phthisical cases. A large proportion of these were kept free of charge, though the Home is unendowed, and supported entirely by small weekly payments made by or for the patients, and by voluntary contributions. Its yearly expenses are over £800, and the highest payment made by patients in any one year only reached £484.

Mrs. Horton has made many personal sacrifices to keep even with current expenses, but the subsciptions have decreased very considerably, and the burden of keeping the Home open has fallen more and more on her shoulders. Unless help is forthcoming she will have with deep regret to close the Home, which has been an inestimable boon to the sick, and especially consumptive patients. It is in fact one of the few Homes for the dying. Medical attendance and careful nursing are given. It is in order that a wider support may be given to Mrs. Horton in her arduous work that I make this appeal.—Yours faithfully,

L. McManus.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessing on the International Students' Conference to be held in Liverpool, January 1-5.—For the winter tour which Mr. W. B. Harrington has started for in India, with the view of travelling all over that great country, visiting all the branches of the Soldiers' Christian Association.—For blessing on services by Pastor Marsh in Dartmouth, for the deepening of spiritual life, January 13 to 17.

THE SOLDIERS' HOME, NEWCASTLE, has celebrated its sixth anniversary. The place was crowded, and many soldiers were unable to get in. Mr. A. C. Margary presided. Mr, P. E. Mather and Lieut.-Colonel H. T. S. Yates, R.A., gave excellent addresses. The annual report, read by Mr. A. Draper, stated that hundreds of soldiers had attended the Home during the year, and the work very satisfactory indeed. A few soldiers testified to the good they had received at the Home. Plans for a new Soldiers' Home are before the general public, to cost not less than £1200.

THE ASHANTIS.—Rev. F. W. Somerville, writing in Work and Workers on "Our Work Among the Ashantis," says that a mission was established in 1894 in Kumasi, but was abandoned owing to the death of its European superintendent. Since then there has been no Christian work done there, the work in Adansi, a tributary state of Kumasi, having also been given up because of the threatening attitude of the Ashantis. The war of 1873-4 resulted in estrangement between the natives and the English, both missionaries and merchants having had far less access to the country than before the war. What Mr. Somerville desires in the missionary interest is that the British Government shall include Kumasi and the whole of Ashanti within the Protectorate, and place a representative of the Government in Kumasi.

The Book World.

Christmas Poems, selected and arranged by T. H. Darlow, M.A., is a handsome booklet. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The Baptist Handbook for 1896, published under the direction of the Council of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, is a full and up-to-date manual of denominational information (2s. Veale, Chifferiel & Co., 31 to 37, Cursitor-street, Chancery Lane, E.C.)

Addresses on St. Matthew's Gospel. By H. N. B. (1s. 4d. T. Brown & Co.) Simple expositions for the help of "lay" readers and evangelists in the mission-field or at home. With much that is good and useful, we find evidences of an undue place being assigned to the sacraments.

Christian Liberality. Translated from the French of Rev. Theo. Rivier. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) A serious and weighty plea on a duty not always viewed in the light of a high privilege. The first sentence strikes the keynote of the book—"All that we have belongs to God."

National Temperance Congress. (3s. 6d. Temperance Publication Depôt.) The addresses at this Congress will be of real service to many, supplying as they do well-weighed and good material for temperance speakers, together with much useful information as to ways of working amongst young and old.

Echoes and Pictures. By Dr. R. H. Thomas. (3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) A collection of poems, varied in theme and in merit, but most of them smooth and tuneful. The longest and most pretentious, on the "Call of Moses," is full of suggestive thought. Some of the translations from Danish and German are very interesting.

Ruth. By W. Spencer Walton. (1s. 4d. R. J. Masters & Co.) A series of suggestive readings in this ancient pastoral narrative, bringing out in a helpful way its typical teachings and deeper spiritual import. Sacerdotalists on the one hand, and Rationalists on the other, are denounced unsparingly, and the need for faithful witnessing is insisted upon.

The King's Highway, Vol. xxiv. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) This journal, devoted to the advocacy of holiness, has much valuable matter bearing on the spiritual life. It is, however, too exclusively concerned with one view of this great theme to be of service to those who, while longing for fuller consecration and growth in grace, cannot adopt the teaching on "entire sanctification" and "perfect love" here advanced.

Hymns of the Early Church. Being translations from the poetry of the Latin Church, arranged in the order of the Christian Year, with hymns for Sundays and weekdays. By Rev. John Brownlie. (2s. 6d. net. Nisbet & Co.) The minister of the Free Church, Portpatrick, is a sacred poet of repute. In this collection he includes a number of poems which have long been familiar in English form; and the volume should have attractions for students of hymnology. The pages testify to skill in transferring ideas, as well as excellent poetic resource. Rev. Dr. C. G. M'Crie supplies a historical introduction and biographical notes.

Vedic India. By Z. A. Ragozin. (5s. T. Fisher Unwin.) This volume of the "Story of the Nations" series is a mine of information, with fine descriptions of scenery and graphic pictures of Eastern manners and people. To those interested in missions, and to believers in the Bible accounts of ancient races and their departure from early knowledge of God, the book will be of no small use. After long and careful examination of Vedic literature and the best expounders of it, the authoress concludes that caste was not a primitive institution, the Brahmins not an exclusive class, Suttee unauthorised by the Vedas, and woman's position far higher in the early days.

Echoes from the Iron Road. By Inspector W. Aitken. (4s. 6d. Glasgow: J. Menzies & Co.) It is not our first introduction to this Railway Bard, for we have heard him speak and read some of his pieces, but till we dipped into this volume we knew not the wealth and fertility of his muse. Never probably has the pathetic side of accidents and collisions been more tellingly touched than in these poems, from the pen of one who knows the home desolation wrought by a "smash on the line." But it is not all tragedy—there are also simple home pieces, stirring Gospel songs, and other spiritual stanzas. We heartily commend this collection of natural, homely, and vivid verse.

The Spiritual Life: Bible Lectures by George C. Needham. (1 dol. American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia.) In Great Britain and America there are many who will value this volume. The lectures are such as Mr. Needham has delivered at Christian conferences; and by way of prefix there is a biographical sketch of the lecturer, and an outline of the origin and spread of the conference movement. The addresses are fourteen in number, dealing (among other themes) with the Ministry of the Spirit, Communion with Jesus, Consecrated Vessels, and the Study of the Bible. The last three chapters are on the Psalms, which are opened up to excellent purpose. The pages treat great subjects in a very helpful way.

Notes on the Scripture Lessons for 1896. (2s. Sunday School Union.) This volume deserves to be warmly welcomed by all Sunday School teachers. The notes on the Morning Lessons are brief, but those on the Afternoon or "International" Lessons are somewhat longer. In every case these helps comprise the setting of the lesson, its context and surroundings; a summary of the story or doctrine it contains; explanatory notes of obscure words or phrases; a lesson plan, in which are suggested, not all, but a few, of the most important points to which emphasis may be given; and to these are invariably added one or two appropriate illustrations. In a very brief compass the thoughtful teacher will find all that he needs to guide him in his own prayerful preparation.

Memoir of John T. Betts, of Pembury. Compiled from diaries, letters, etc., by Letitia Jennings. (B. T. Batsford, 94, High Holborn.) The subject of this deeply-interesting volume was noble in youth and lovely in old age, and his career was as striking as his personality was fascinating. He was uncle to Rev. F. B. Meyer, who, in a tenderly-expressed preface, refers to "his remarkable linguistic powers, his travels, his laborious translations, his endeavours to popularise for English readers the works of the Spanish reformers, his endeavours for the spiritual and intellectual welfare of his neighbours." These matters are well outlined in the book, the authoress having been intimate with Mr. Betts for many years. The biography is admirably constructed, and there is a beautiful portrait of the subject, who is remembered with sincere affection by all who knew him.

Our Lord's Miracles (Vol. 1. 7s.) is the title of a selection of fifty-four sermons by the late C. H. Spurgeon. Such a collection of the beloved pastor's expositions of texts associated with, or bearing on, the miraculous works of our Lord Jesus Christ has special value, for the sake of which the want of uniformity and sequence in paging will be overlooked. A second volume is promised shortly. Another substantial book is The Gospel for the People (5s.), containing sixty short sermons by C. H. Spurgeon, with a sketch of his life and a number of portraits and engravings. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, who writes the preface, says this collection (his own suggestion) is designed to meet the needs of such as find the ordinary discourses too long for reading in the bush, on the sea, and at the fireside. We agree with him that these sermons are "full of sound doctrine, saving truth, and heart-moving appeal, combined with brilliant thought, common sense, and quaint humour." The book will meet a want in many out-of-the-way places, and the illustrated life-sketch renders it peculiarly attractive. (Passmore & Alabaster.)

How to Come Home to God, by R. E. Faulkner, is a striking booklet. (4d. H. R. Allenson.)

A Child's Heart. By Rev. David Burns. (1d Glasgow: Morison.) A capital address (illustrated) to young folk on idols, ancient and modern.

Snowell's Housekeeper's Account Book for 1896 will be useful to the stewards of large households and others who wish to record domestic expenditure. (Virtue & Co.)

Christianity and Churchmanship, by M. O. Evans, of Wrexham, is properly styled "An Essay towards Comprehension." It will have special interest for those who follow ecclesiastical questions as they affect Wales. (6d. H. R. Allenson.)

Scripture Searching Almanack, 1896. By E. L. S. (1d Marshall Bros.) This almanack is designed to encourage those who use it to search the Word, and see if these things are so. The profits are devoted to the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution.

UNITED PRAYER.—I invite the earnest attention of your readers to the circle of united prayer, commenced in July last. Its object is to bring Christians together in real union before God, apart from all sectional differences, in strong supplication and prayer. More and more loudly does the call come that we who know the power of prayer should use it. Will every reader who agrees with this object join the union, entailing as it does no sacrifice, except of time and thought? Every first of the month, at 7 a.m., noon, and evening, we join as members of one family before our Father's throne for the fuller outpouring of the Holy Spirit on all Christians and upon all Christian work in all lands. A card of membership is being issued, price 1d., to cover cost and postage. Mr. John Blackham, Hill Top, West Bromwich, will gladly send a card if friends will enclose a slip with their name and address, and a stamp.

East End Poor.—We wish to give some thousands of Christmas dinners to unemployed but respectable poor, in which frail little children often ask for bread. £200 will enable us to provide nearly 6000 Christmas dinners.—(Rev.) J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawley-road, E.

Mr. James Sharpless writes on behalf of his afflicted and aged ones who do not receive help from other missions. For many years the Lord has enabled him to help some special cases at Christmas, and he should feel grieved if they went without this season.—Address, 14, Sidney-square, E.

Surrey Chapel.—This year, as last, we are giving 1000 poor children a meal and a happy evening, 150 poor mothers the same, and 100 Christmas dinners to deserving families. Warm clothing, toys, dolls, etc., will also be acceptable.—J. Tolefree Parr, 62, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

Lisson Grove Mission.—Our funds are quite exhausted, and we need assistance badly. We wish to raise funds for a Christmas treat and prizes for 200 children; and to give some little pleasure at the holiday season to a number of poor mothers and others.—George T. Hunt, 5, St. Ann's-terrace, St. John's Wood, N.W.

The "Boyer" Drift and Crippled Children's Mission appeal for funds to carry on work among over 600 afflicted children, and to relieve the many distressing cases continually found in house-to-house visitation. Clothing, books, and toys for distribution and exchange.—E. M. Archer, 29, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.

Hillway, Bembridge.—A few poor villagers, who have been blessed through the labours of Mr. A. H. Couldrey, have been compelled (by losing the cottage in which they met) to put up a little hall. They have collected £56, but there is a debt of £135, for which they plead for help.—Address, Mr. A. H. Couldrey, Grove House, Bembridge.

Lambeth Walk Mission, S.E.—Our Poor Fund for giving Christmas dinners is entirely exhausted. On Tuesday a dear little bright-eyed boy of some ten summers came to ask me (as sent by his afflicted mother) if I could give them some bread, for they had not a particle of food in the house for breakfast.—Geo. Goodman, 29, Princes-square, Kennington, S.E.

Mr. W. Harrison, who has now entered on the pastorate of Orange-street, Leicester-square, which he is carrying on on mission lines, as at the Soho Mission, with which he was so long associated, will be glad of help in relieving the poorest and most deserving at this season; also to give tracts to the children. His address is 24, Merrick-square, Newington, S.E.

Friendless and Fallen.—There is still about £200 needed to meet the expenses of the year's work. The work of the homes and open-all-night refuge being continuous all through the year, it is earnestly hoped that the Lord's steward's will come to our help, so that the sum required may be raised. Upwards of 1000 have been helped this year, while nearly 40,000 have been assisted to make a fresh start in life since 1857.—Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, N.W.

Trinity-street, Southwark.—It has been my custom each year of my work here to gather together as many of the poorest children we could find in our streets—without respect of creed or condition—and endeavour for a brief period to brighten their cheerless lives. The festival includes the distribution of dolls and toys of every description. A tea is also provided to invited guests. In connection we have a distribution of new and second-hand clothes.—Rev. J. Flanagan, 19, Falmouth-road, S.E.

The Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows has now been in existence seventy-two years, and it would be scarcely possible to estimate the benefits it has conferred in granting relief to thousands of poor destitute widows during that period, many of whom have borne testimony that the money given has enabled them to overcome the difficulties consequent on their bereavement, and open the way to a future livelihood independently of parochial assistance.—Samuel Rayson, Sec., 32, Sackville-street, W.

Abbey-lane Mission, Stratford, E., situated in one of the poorest and darkest districts in the East of London, just across the border of the metropolis, is endeavouring to form fretwork and rough carpentering classes, and also a small library. As none of our members are any too well off, we appeal for means to carry on this work amongst the lads of our district. If any readers have any old tools which they do not require, such as saws, hammers, planes, chisels, etc., we shall be very pleased to accept them.—Edward W. George, The Woodlands, Carnarvon-road, Stratford, E.

Destitute Children's Dinner Fund.—The number of dinners given last season was 255,002, being 30,578 in excess of the previous season. The children's pence contributions amounted to £480 19s. 11d. The small surplus of £23 left in hand, and the much valued annual subscriptions now coming in, have induced the committee to comply with urgent requests to open the dining-rooms early in November, and thus strengthen the children, nourished and fortified in body and mind with wholesome food, to meet whatever 1896 may bring; 40 rooms are already open.—Mr. H. Morton-Cana, 13, Ilminster-gardens, Lavender-hill, S.W.

The Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution relieves aged and infirm domestic servants. Since its formation 332 pensioners have been elected, ninety-five of whom are now in receipt of £15 to £20 each per annum. Upwards of £45,500 has been thus distributed, and many thousand cases relieved with temporary assistance. At the last election there were 138 applicants for the pension, but the committee, for want of necessary funds, were only able to elect nine pensioners from this long list, the remaining 129 applicants, many of whom are over seventy years of age, are still waiting in sore need.—William Sly, Secretary, 22, Sackville-street, W, Fallen Asleep.

At Worthing, Rev. John Adam, aged seventy-four, who for over fifty years has laboured devotedly as pastor of New-street Chapel.—At Exmoor Lodge, Kettlewell, on 4th inst., Mrs. John Kettlewell, widow of a well-known and influential Christian labourer.—At Kingswood, Bristol, on 14th inst., Rev. J. Cleave, after a short illness, an earnest and faithful Methodist preacher.—At Islington, Birmingham very suddenly, Mrs. Dyson, wife of Rev. A. Dyson, Wesleyan minister.—At Topsham, Mr. Edward Parsons, for fifty years an earnest worker and preacher.—At Stoke Newington, Miss M. A. J. Bomford, a useful servant of Christ.—At Grantham, on 13th inst., Mrs. Henry Watts, aged sixty-seven, wife of the Baptist pastor.—At Blackhill, Durham, on 19th inst., Rev. Joseph Muir, aged thirty-nine, Wesleyan minister at Bayswater, who had done good work at Bristol and Liverpool.

Notices.

LITERATURE FOR WORKHOUSES.

For two or three years past the Free Literature Society, of Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, E.C., has undertaken to distribute literature to the workhouses, collecting the same from publishers and private houses, and sending it in carriage-paid monthly parcels to some eighty or a hundred workhouses all over the country, who in return for an annual subscription of £5 to cover cost of collection and transmission, receive reading matter of the published price of £12 per annum. This, of course, could not be done without copious use of back numbers, which, however, are fresh enough to the inmates.

Mr. Haddon, who superintends the collection and distribution of this literature, has almost exhausted the publishers, and he must now rely upon private philanthropy. A post-card to the Free Literature Society, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, E.C., from any of your readers in the London radius, stating that they have a bundle of periodicals, pictures, books, or Christmas cards, will ensure a call from the collector of the society, and after that their distribution proceeds almost automatically. W. T. Stead.

RUSSIA.—A Berlin correspondent telegraphs that a number of provincial governors invited to St. Petersburg will shortly confer on the measure depriving the village courts in Russia of the power to inflict corporal punishment, and on the best means of combating the enormous increase of drunkenness among the lower orders. It is believed that the young Empress is deeply interested in temperance reform in Russia.

HAM YARD SOUP KITCHEN needs increased support for the daily work of the institution. It is open all the year. The hospice contains twenty beds for cases of temporary distress; poor convalescents and others of good character who need a helping hand to regain employment. Since the institution was founded in 1846, it has supplied many millions of meals of soup and bread for the poor in London. It distributes annually from 230,000 to 260,000 meals, and provides 4000 to 5000 nights' lodgings. The Christmas dinner reaches about 1000 families. Since the coal famine in 1873, the committee have issued coal tickets for half-a-hundred weight each, and up to 1895, 2055 tons have been distributed. For some years past penny dinners have been provided for boardmen in the kitchen, and for persons to take home.—W. Stevens, Superintendent, Ham Yard, Piccadilly Circus, W.

APPLICATIONS FOR AGENCIES INVITED.

THE CHILDREN'S HOMES

(REV. DR. STEPHENSON'S)

Maintain 930 children, of both sexes, from all parts of the country—belonging to all churches and to no church—of all ages, and on the sole ground of want, exposure, and moral peril. The Dean of Canterbury, Dr. J. H. Rigg, Sir Henry H. Fowler, Dr. Clifford, Mr. J. J. Colman, and many others support its claims. The support depends on voluntary contributions. Additional houses could readily be built if income were forthcoming to maintain them. Applications come in daily for necessitous cases. Contributions will be thankfully received by Rev. Dr. Stephenson, Bonner-road, London, N.E., or may be sent to the Publishers of "The Christian." Cheques crossed "City Bank."

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S DINNER SOCIETY.

This old-established Society is earnestly in need of funds to carry on its work. Last season they gave 255,002 Dinners to poor children.

Donations may be sent to Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall-mall East, S.W. (Treasurer); H. Morton Carr, Esq., 13, Ilminster-gardens, Lavender-hill, S.W. (Secretary); or to Bankers, Messrs. THE BRIDGE OF HOPE,
RATCLIFF HIGHWAY, E.

In order effectively to carry on this very difficult work, both Annual Subscriptions and Special Donations are earnestly asked for.

The Annual Report, with Balance Sheet and Subscription List, will be gladly forwarded on application. The Publishers of The Christian will also receive Contributions.

COPENHAGEN.—Mr. W. Wright, 5, Nöjsomhedsvej, Copenhagen, Ö., in a recent letter, says: "The late Mr. Radcliffe had not a little to do with the Inner Mission in Copenhagen. If it had not been for him, I do not think I should ever have started the Court Yard Mission, which is now working so well in all its branches. I have this year held many meetings and done much house-visiting. We have often about 500 people attending our open-air meetings; and our meetings on the staircases during the winter months are also going on well. We continue our midnight mission to men, and are much encouraged in this work. Lately, at a meeting for men only, our bishop spoke strongly against the impurity sanctioned by law. Mrs. Robertson provides me with Bibles to give away, and many are the good results of her kind gifts."

105th INTERVIEW.

With Mr. DAVID K. MITCHELL, 49, King-street, Stirling, with reference to a case in Glasgow.
"ADVANCED AND HOPELESS."
Not published before.

Mr. David Mitchell, judging from the testimony of those who have known him long, is one of those (of whom there are far too few) who endeavour to do all the good they can to their fellows. Not only is he actively engaged in Christian work, but in a variety of ways he seeks to benefit all with whom he comes in contact.

It was a gentleman engaged in business in Stirling who sent me to Mr. Mitchell, telling me that he knew of some remarkable cases of cure following the use of Mr Congreve's remedies for chest disease; and an hour or two later, at my hotel in the town, Mr. Mitchell gave me the particulars which follow.

"I had heard my brother-in-law, who is a Baptist minister in Airdrie, speak very highly of Mr. Congreve," he said; "and that caused me to recommend the treatment in the case of the wife of a keeper of a U.P. Mission-hall in Glasgow. She had been ill for many months; the doctors attending her said she was suffering from Consumption, but the medicine they gave her failed to do her good. The disease was very far advanced, and her husband and friends had quite given up hope of her getting better. At that time I was the superintendent of the Sunday-school at the mission-hall, and I strongly advised the husband to try Mr. Congreve's treatment. This advice was seconded by our missionary, who also knew something of the efficacy of the medicine, and the husband followed it, with the result that his wife got better and is now healthy, strong, and well. This happened three years ago, and, although I have since left Glasgow, I still occasionally see the husband, who tells me his wife is still in good health. The woman herself says the medicine saved her life."

In reply to a further question, Mr. Mitchell told me that he had recommended Mr. Congreve's treatment to many other people, who had found it greatly beneficial.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.
